Marine Trades already looking to next year after successful fireworks show

Fireworks again exploded in the skies over Middle River this year, just as they did in this file photo from the show in 2013.

- By Patrick Taylor -

After a firework hiatus in 2017, the Marine Trades Association of Baltimore County (MTABC) pulled out all the stops at their June 30 show.

Thousands viewed the extravaganza from the shorelines of Middle River, with the roughly 17-minute show living up to expectations.

"I thought they went pretty good," said Brian Schneider, a leader of MTABC. "I had one of my members so far tell me he thought they could have been better. I said 'Man he told us everything he was going to do and gave us everything we asked for."" "There was one little lull - a 20-second spot. Otherwise it was one after the other, no lag time between shoots," Schneider continued. "And it was one hell of a finale."

The finale included a dedication to Raymond Porter, the owner of Porter's Seneca Marina who passed away on June 5 of last year.

"The final shot was of these fireworks called 'parachutes,' which Raymond loved very much," said Schneider. "So the final moment was these embers falling and extinguishing in the water. It was a very fitting end to the show."

In the weeks leading up to the show, Schneider had been pushing for more donations. The cost to put on the show this year ran close to $50,000, with an additional $8,000 needed for a deposit on next year's show. Schneider said in the final days leading up to the show he saw a decent amount of money come in to help the cause.

"That was the marinas that were holding off donating, coming to the rescue at the end," said Schneider.

While Schneider heaped praise on marina owners for coming to the rescue, he also had kind words for Sharon Kehnemui and Karen Gouldmann, two residents

NEWS

- By Devin Crum -

The Chesapeake Bay Foundation announced some promising signs of bay health and oyster population recovery late last month with the news that a manmade oyster reef near the Francis Scott Key Bridge is thriving.

The organization also announced nearly two weeks earlier that a long-planned project to dredge Man O'War Shoal for oyster shell, which recently cleared a major regulatory hurdle, could be detrimental to that reef's ecosystem while having uncertain benefits for the bay's overall oyster population.

CBF announced on June 28 that an artificial ovster reef around Fort Carroll, the abandoned former military facility in the middle of the Patapsco River, is in excellent condition. Further, monitoring done between December 2017 and May this year found an average survivability rate of 75 percent on the reef, according to spokesman Tom Zolper, which is comparable to oysters grown in protected conditions.

In fact, despite the silt in the river which can smother the bivalves, divers found large clumps of oysters growing vertically above the silt. And although just a year old, the reef was already attracting at least 13 species of other marine life, such as anemone, barnacles, mussels, mud crabs and grass shrimp.

Construction of the 1.1-acre reef took about six months, Zolper said, and used chunks of granite for its base layer with oyster shell seeded with larvae, or "spat," CBF sees good, bad news regarding local oyster projects placed on top. Funding came through contributions from the Maryland Port Administration, Maryland Environmental Service and the Abell Foundation.

CBF has placed a total of 3 million young oysters on the reef, and Zolper said the oysters there are growing at a rate of about 0.1 millimeters per day, or nearly 1.5 inches per year.

CBF Maryland fisheries scientist Dr. Allison Colden said that rate is similar to oysters around the bay.

"Oysters are resilient creatures. If we give them the habitat they need they will settle down and form a community, begin filtering our water and provide a home for other marine life," Colden said in a statement. "Baltimore is demonstrating it can be a flourishing home for underwater life."

The Fort Carroll reef is part of the Chesapeake Oyster Alliance's - of which CBF is a member - goal of adding 10 billion oysters to bay waters by 2025. But Zolper said they are not finished at the reef and plan to return next year to add 2 - 3 million new oysters.

"They want to keep building that reef, and at the same time the reef on the other side of the fort," he said, referring to the older companion reef which has been built up and maintained by the Great Baltimore Oyster Partnership, the Living Classrooms Foundation and the Maryland Department of Natural Resources since 1995.

The Partnership adds about 150,000 oysters to that reef each year and aims to add at least 5 million to both reefs by 2020.

Alternatively, CBF Maryland Executive Director Alison Prost issued a statement June 18 reiterating the group's opposition to dredging Man O'War Shoal following the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' granting of a permit on May 17 to carry out the work.

That permit allows DNR to dredge up to 5 million bushels of oyster shells over a five-year period from the shoal, located a few miles off the end of the North Point Peninsula, near the mouth of the Patapsco River. While the permit is provisional and covers the first five years, the plan could seek to dredge as much as 30 million bushels in the long term.

However, CBF and other groups, such as the Coastal Conservation Association, have opposed the plan believing it will damage important fish habitat and that harm will outweigh any benefits.

"There is no need to dredge this reef," Prost's statement read. "Granite, crushed concrete and other materials are viable alternatives to shell for building sanctuary reefs."

Zolper said scientific research suggests artificial substrates like concrete or granite are as good if not better than oyster shells for growing oysters, and that is true, "certainly on restoration reefs and sometimes even in replenishment on harvest reefs," according to research done by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Harris Creek on the Eastern Shore. "There was four times more reproduction on some of the granite than there was on the actual shell that was used on the same reef," he said.

Prost also expressed concern both that the permit does not specify how the dredged shell will be used, and that the project will drain the state's oyster restoration budget.

"The general public has a great interest in the health of oysters in the bay. Yet the permit application does not say if the dredged shell will be used to help grow and harvest more oysters or to help grow oysters protected from harvest, or both," Prost said.

And although some watermen have been pushing for the dredging project to benefit their harvests, Colden told the East County Times that even if DNR were permitted to dredge all 30 million bushels, it would not produce a significant or lasting benefit to the oyster population.

"If 100 percent of the shell were allocated to [harvest areas] and plantings were targeted to only the top harvestproducing areas, only 2 percent of the area in these regions could be planted one time," she said. "Given the lifespan of oyster shell is three to six years and oysters do not reach market size until 3 years old, those areas could maybe be harvested twice before the shell is gone."

"While the dredging will provide little benefit, it will cost taxpayers $20 to $25 million," Prost stated. "Most of that money will come from the state's oyster restoration budget ... That means virtually all money set aside to help rebuild the oyster population in Maryland would be drained in order to destroy an historic oyster reef.'

She said more shell will be available for replenishing harvest areas if they use alternatives elsewhere.

The permit was also modified from the DNR application to say that they will not dredge in the portion of the shoal that is within the Gales/Lump sanctuary.

'There's sort of good news and bad news" in that, Zolper said. "We're happy that there won't be any penetration of the sanctuary, but what it also means is that they will do more focused, intense dredging in a smaller area."

Roughly one-third - 61 acres - of the shoal's 214 acres are in the sanctuary.

Zolper said at least there will be monitoring of the reef habitat before and after dredging to see what the impact is, and the permit does include provisions that the work will cease if they determine it is having significant negative impacts.

"There doesn't seem to be a harmless way to do this, but at least we'll find out through the monitoring if it's done right," he said.

East side rats: There's a new contract out on your heads

- By Marge Neal -

Baltimore County's rat eradication pilot program worked so well over the summer and fall of 2017 that officials have decided to expand the effort to 10 new neighborhoods, including five on the east side.

The assault on rodents will spread to St. Helena, Foxcroft, Country Ridge, Yorkway/Cornwall and Ballard Gardens, according to county officials.

"I am very pleased that communities in my district will be part of the county's rat eradication program," Sixth District Councilwoman Cathy Bevins said in a statement that announced the program expansion. "As I move around my district, there is nothing more important to my constituents than their quality of life, and ridding communities of rat infestation is a critical component of that effort."

The program began in nine communities last year, with four more communities added midway through the effort based upon the success of the effort in the original areas.

The multi-pronged attack on rats included chemical treatment, a second weekly trash pick-up day and an intensive educational effort to teach residents how to eliminate habits that encourage infestation.

The original communities will move to the prevention stage of treatment, according to Ray Hauf, quality coordinator for Regional Pest Management, the company awarded the contract to treat the five new eastside neighborhoods.

The prevention stage will involve placing and monitoring tamper-proof bait traps at each alley light pole in the 13 pilot areas.

Treatment of the new communities will begin in St. Helena on July 16, Hauf said.

"We're really hoping to get the word out to residents in these neighborhoods," Hauf said. "Some of them have good HOAs and some don't, so we're trying to get word out before we start showing up in yards and alleys."

The treatment strategy includes an inspection of front and back yards, Hauf said. Properties that are found to be without any signs of infestation will be marked with a bright green ribbon while those with active signs of rodent activity will be treated and marked with a red ribbon.

"In homes without pets, we'll dust burrows with tracking powder," Hauf said. "And in homes with pets, we'll place a base station trap that pets can't access."

Tamper-proof traps will also be used to treat burrows that are under sheds and other areas that cannot be easily accessed.

The third element of the program is education, according to Hauf. Informational handouts will be distributed with tips on making yards less attractive to rats.

"We want people to make sure all of their trash is put in containers with tightly fitting lids," he said. "And it's important to keep all animal waste picked up."

Many people are not aware that animal waste is a food source for rats, he said.

Residents will also be encouraged to keep all bushes and shrubbery neatly trimmed to eliminate hiding areas.

Community members with pets are asked to keep them indoors when the treatments are being administered, Hauf said. And when yards cannot be accessed on the first attempt, a door hanger with another inspection/treatment day will be left at the home.

"We want to do our best to let the residents of these added communities know of the program and that we will be on their property," Hauf said. "Getting word out will help avoid conflicts

On our masthead: A show of solidarity

The East County Times is joining hands with newspapers across the country Thursday, July 12, in a show of solidarity with our colleagues at the Capital Gazette in Annapolis as well as our fellow journalists who strive to provide a voice for communities big and small, from coast to coast.

On June 28, after five Capital Gazette staffers were gunned down, allegedly by a man who harbored a longtime grudge against the company, surviving reporter Chase Cook issued a Tweet that has become a battle cry for community journalism: "I can tell you this: We are putting out a damn paper

Today, newspapers across the country are printing that Tweet on their mastheads in a show of solidarity.

Journalists are used to covering the news and events of their communities; they are not used to being the story.

So Cook's response resonated with all of us in this business: Of course the remaining staff would publish a paper the next day, no doubt about it. While we hope to never have to write a story about the violent deaths of people who used to sit in desks next to ours, we will if we have to.

Because, damn it, that's what we do.

Essex Day to celebrate 43rd birthday with a facelift

- By Marge Neal -

Essex Day will have a bright, shiny new face to show off when the 43rd annual community festival takes over Eastern Boulevard this fall.

For the first time in the event's history, organizers believe, Essex Day will be held on a Saturday, with longer hours, more entertainment and a day of the week that is hopefully more attractive to vendors, sponsors and attendees, according to Essex Day volunteer Brian Marchetti.

"We're very excited about the changes we're making to Essex Day this year, and we're very excited about our new partnership with Starleigh Entertainment," Marchetti told the East County Times. "Starleigh has made a very generous sponsorship offer and what used to be known as the Main Stage will now be known as the Starleigh Entertainment Stage."

The committee approached Rob Baier, president of Starleigh, to begin planning the entertainment.

Baier, who was born and raised in Middle River, made the sponsorship offer unsolicited, Marchetti said.

"We didn't even have to ask; he made the offer. We couldn't be more grateful that they're doing this," Marchetti said of Starleigh. "And I think that if Rob wasn't a local guy, this doesn't happen. They want to be part of the community and give back to Essex."

it doesn't get any better!

"We are really excited to be a part of this," Baier told the Times. "I played in Essex Day when I was about 19 and the old Midway Cafe was still there, so it's pretty cool to be able to do this."

Baier, now 47, has come full circle as a co-owner along with Gary Hutson - of the entertainment booking company that he used as a young performer.

With Baier's band, Kanye Twitty, already announced as a Starleigh Stage attraction, he shared with the Times the rest of the headliner bands for that stage: Red Dirt Revolution, Tripwire and Dean Crawford and the Dunn's River Band.

"We think we have a great lineup so far," Baier said. "The music side used to be such a great part of Essex Day and then it seemed to fall by the wayside a bit. We're really hoping the live music moves forward in a positive manner and brings people back in."

Baier said fair organizers approached him about booking his band and began a conversation that ended with the sponsorship offer.

"They were looking for sponsors and I was interested in being a sponsor so this worked out well," Baier said. "It's just a perfect fit for both of us."

Marchetti estimates the value of the sponsorship to be in the $7,000 range. Starleigh, "the region's most diversified provider of quality entertainment," according to its website, is making a donation to Essex Day that will "essentially cover the costs of the bands, the sound system, the backline equipment and crew," Marchetti said.

Past festivals have had three stages: the main stage, a Christian music stage and a karaoke spot. Organizers will add a "homegrown" stage this year, with the hope of featuring local talent just getting started. While in the early stages of planning, Marchetti said organizers think the new stage will add tremendously to the fair's entertainment offerings.

The Saturday fair will have hours of 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., as opposed to the noon to 5 p.m. hours of past Sunday events, according to Marchetti, which will mean additional bands and attractions on all four stages.

With the move to Saturday, Marchetti said the organizing committee is preparing to set up a fair infrastructure that will accommodate a significant increase in attendance.

"With the move from Sunday to Saturday we won't be competing with the Ravens, and we just think Saturday will work better for more vendors and attendees and be more convenient for businesses along the boulevard," Marchetti said.

The fair occupies Eastern Boulevard from Mace Avenue to Woodward Drive in the heart of downtown Essex. In addition to four stages of entertainment, the event will offer a kids' area; costumed characters; arts and crafts; free tours of the Heritage Society of Essex and Middle River; novelty, sports and food vendors; carnival rides; nonprofit organizations; and local businesses.

With just over two months until show time, organizers are busy recruiting sponsors, with a variety of financial levels available to suit both businesses and individuals, according to Marchetti.

For the first time, an Essex Day T-shirt will be produced. The logos of all multi-level sponsors will be printed on the back, and all individual sponsors who contribute $25 will receive a free shirt, according to festival sponsorship publicity.

All sponsorships are due by Aug. 15. For more information regarding sponsorship opportunities, call 443-579-4913 or email essexdayfestival@gmail.com.

Marchetti said he and his five fellow committee members, led by President Paul Rufe, are looking forward to the new Essex Day and hope residents are pleased with the results. They hope the move to Saturday, the new partnership with Starleigh and expanded activities and fair-goer opportunities "bring new life to Essex Day" and put it on an upward trajectory for the future.

New developer takes on stalled Essex townhouse plan

- By Virginia Terhune -Still before the Baltimore County Board of Appeals after two years, a plan for 125 townhouses and four single-family houses off Back River Neck Road is now moving forward with a new developer.

Initiated in 2016 as Canterbury Crossing by Glen Burnie-based Craftsmen Developers, a nearly identical project is now seeking county approval as Hyde Park Overlook headed by Edward Gold, a developer based in Pikesville and affiliated with Riggs LLC.

The 22-acre, partially wooded site long owned by the Hendersen-Webb apartment company in Cockeysville is located between Back River Neck Road and Southeastern Boulevard / MD-702 next to the Hyde Park Station shopping center.

An older proposal for stores, restaurants and office space was succeeded in 2007 by an approved plan for 180 apartments, followed in 2016 by Craftsmen's alternative proposal for the three-story townhouses and single-family homes.

Some local community associations and businesses welcomed the change from rental apartments to the lower number of for-sale townhouses, but other groups objected to what they called a loophole in the development process Craftsmen had sought for county approval.

Building projects can be approved in two ways, one of which requires a community input meeting early in the process to invite public comment. That is followed by a formal development plan hearing before an administrative law judge who can impose legally binding conditions on a project.

Alternatively, projects can seek an administrative approval of a limited exemption, allowed by the county's Department of Permits, Approvals and Inspections after a public review by the county's Development Review Committee. The DRC is made up of department representatives. If granted, plans are subject to further review, but no official community input meeting or public hearing is required.

Craftsmen was granted approval through the latter process, and the Rockaway Beach and Bauernschmidt Manor improvement associations as well as the New Haven Woods Community Association jointly appealed in July 2016, arguing the change in the plan was significant enough to warrant a hearing.

Craftsmen ultimately dropped the project, and Gold is now moving forward under the development plan hearing process, which requires more public input.

A county administrative law judge has scheduled a public hearing for Thursday, July 26, at 10 a.m. in Room 205 of the Jefferson Building at 105 W. Chesapeake Ave. in Towson. The developer has also asked for setback variances and approval of seven units instead of six in one of the townhouse groupings.

The Gold plan shows two entrances off Back River Neck Road and one off Hyde Park Road across from the shopping center. Sidewalks are planned on the Hendersen-Webb site along both roads, and a traffic impact study is required.

The Rockaway Beach Improvement Association, which represents residents of Turkey Point and Cape May roads, emailed a statement about the current plan but declined to comment further before the hearing.

'Our appeal for the requested limited exemption filed in the fall of 2016 still remains active," according to the RBIA email. "The case has been postponed, as the developer has opted to pursue an alternative method to seek county approvals for their proposal.

"Given the large scale of the proposed project, it's likely that density would be a major concern for the residents of the nearby communities. Our organization is still actively reviewing the proposed development and does not wish to provide any [further] comment at this time."

In addition to the problems with the development process, the associations also had questions about an expected increase in traffic and enrollments at local schools, one of which is overcrowded.

Deep Creek Elementary School was 135 students over capacity during the 2017-2018 school year, while Deep Creek Middle and Chesapeake High schools were 304 and 43 students under capacity, respectively, according to the Baltimore County Public Schools website.

of Bauernschmidt Manor in Essex. Kehnemui and Gouldmann, along with Kehnemui's husband, Tony Schumacher, managed to raise $5,400 for the MTABC.

Kehnemui said she and Gouldmann discussed what they could do during last November's boat parade. Ultimately, they decided to host a fireworks viewing party, with attendees paying a $25 donation, and held a raffle to drum up donations. After the fireworks were moved from last year's location, Kehnemui realized it was the perfect opportunity to bring awareness to the cause.

"My husband and I are always looking for a good reason to throw a party," said Kehnemui with a laugh.

Kehnemui works in marketing, so the work was right up her alley, and she described Gouldmann as a "party planner extraordinaire."

In April, the first of six donations was sent to the MTABC. When they kept on coming, Schneider was left wondering who these mystery donors were.

"We never knew these people," said Schneider. "They came out of the blue. So we owe a big thanks to them."

While the efforts of Kehnemui might seem like the work of a lifelong resident, she has only been in the area since 2012. Before moving to Essex, she lived in Washington, D.C., but through "twists and turns" she ended up in Baltimore County. Eventually, she and her husband bought a house in Essex in 2013.

"Living in Essex was never part of my plan, but now that I am living here I feel like it's such a hidden gem," said Kehmenui. "It's so underappreciated as a community."

Despite the work she, her husband and Gouldmann did, Kehmenui downplayed the contribution.

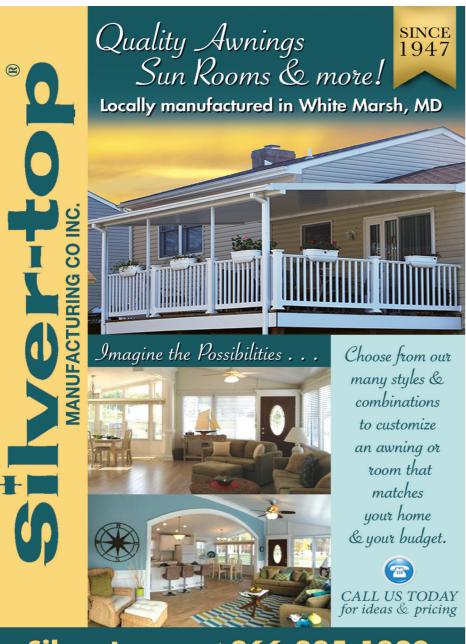

"I felt like our contribution, you know the number of people it took, compared to some of the individual donors, it seems minimalist to me," said Kehmenui.

But Schneider disagreed, saying the work they did is a template for other communities to follow. Schneider said that while he appreciated big donations from individuals, getting the whole community involved is the ultimate goal.

"We didn't get that kind of money from Wilson Point. In fact we were snubbed for a couple non-monetary things," said Schneider.

Leading up to the shoot, Schneider had been looking for someone to host the Baltimore County Fire Marshal. After striking out on Wilson Point, Kehnemui again stepped up to the plate.

"That's community outreach there. All of Bauernschmidt Manor came through big time," said Schneider. "For them to raise that money and exert all that effort is just amazing. People want a better show, well that's what we need."

Olszewski leads by nine in Dem county executive primary votes as recount looms

- By Patrick Taylor -

On Tuesday morning, former Delegate Johnny Olszewski Jr. was certified as the winner of the Democratic county executive primary.

As of press time on Tuesday, State Senator Jim Brochin had not filed for a recount, but he told The Baltimore Sun on Monday night that he planned to petition for a recount. Last week at the Board of Elections facility in Hunt Valley, Brochin's campaign manager Marc Lazerow told The East County Times that he expected a recount petition to be filed. A petition needs to be submitted by Thursday, July 12.

Olszewski told The Times on Monday that a conference call with the campaigns and Board of Elections was set for Tuesday, where they would get more information about a potential recount. According to Brochin campaign attorney Tim Hodge, the recount would need to begin two days after the petition is filed, and the campaign plans to petition on either Wednesday or Thursday.

Board of Elections Director Katie Brown said that a recount effort could take up to five days to complete, depending on how the recount is done. The ballots could either be re-scanned or counted manually.

Despite things still being somewhat in limbo for the Democratic primary, Olszewski has been in high spirits.

"I'm still just so humbled and honored to be where we are today and incredibly grateful for the supporters and volunteers," said Olszewski. He added that he has "the utmost trust and confidence" in the numbers put out by the Board of Elections.

The Democrats will likely need to get through a recount effort. And if the recount procedure is anything like the absentee and provisional ballot procedure, we could be in for some drama.

During absentee ballot tallying last Friday, there was a discrepancy. There were supposed to be 912 ballots counted for the Democratic primary for county executive, but the board fell short a few times.

Before the tallying began, Brown told the election board members present to take their time. But after the numbers did not match on first and second counts, Brown posited that canvassers who had been putting the ballots through scanners did not see that errors had occurred. Eventually, multiple scanners were moved to a separate room - with a window for viewing for observers - and the absentee ballots were counted again.

After the absentee ballots were counted, Olszewski held a seven-vote lead. Despite more than 1,000 provisional ballots being tallied the same day, the additional votes only boosted Olszewski by two, bringing his lead to nine.

While a team of lawyers and his campaign manager, Tucker Cavanaugh, are dealing with the likely recount effort, Olszewski has his sights set on the general election in November, where the Democratic nominee would take on Maryland Insurance Commissioner Al Redmer, who upended Delegate Pat McDonough in the Republican primary.

In politics, it is not uncommon to stake a claim either as a hard-right or hard-left candidate in the primary, then shift back to the center during the general election campaign. But Olszewski, who has built up an identity as a "progressive" candidate, does not exactly see it that way.

"I'd say better schools, 21st-century jobs and transparency in government are things that everyone can get behind, whether they are a Democrat, Republican, Independent, unaffiliated or whatever," said Olszewski. "This is a campaign for all residents of Baltimore County. It's about making a better Baltimore County for everyone."

The general election is set for Nov. 6. For additional updates on the recount process, follow ECT's Facebook feed.

Dundalk man arrested after four-hour standoff

At 8 p.m. on July 8, Baltimore County officers attempted to stop a vehicle with stolen tags in the area of Willow Spring Road and Pine Avenue in Dundalk. When the officers approached the car they observed that the driver was the only person inside the vehicle. The driver got out of the car, pulled out a handgun, and walked away from the officers holding the gun against himself.

The suspect continued to walk away from police, as the officers set up a perimeter around the man. The suspect stopped near the intersection of Yorkway and Kinship while continuing to hold the gun against his body, threatening to shoot himself. In response, the Department deployed the tactical and hostage negotiations units.

Just before 12:30 a.m. on July 9, the suspect surrendered to police. Officers recovered the gun and a knife from the suspect. Police also found another gun inside the car.

The suspect has been identified as Jason John Kassakatis, 50, of the 2400-block of Fairway in Dundalk. After receiving medical treatment, Kassakatis was charged with first-degree assault, second-degree assault, convicted felon in possession of a firearm, handgun on person, handgun in a vehicle, illegal possession of ammunition, possession of CDS, possession of paraphernalia, failure to obey a lawful order, possession of a dangerous weapon and theft under $100. He is currently being held on a denied bail status at the Baltimore County Department of Corrections.

Kingsville man charged after stealing car, fleeing police

The man who stole a car from a woman at the Canton Car Wash in Nottingham on June 29, leading police on a pursuit that ended when he crashed into a car at the Sonic Drive-In, and then into a BGE transformer, light pole, and traffic signal box at Rossville Boulevard and Kelso Drive is identified as Christopher Anthony Denicolis, 38, of the 12400 block of Wolbert Way in Kingsville. Denicolis is charged with Theft of Auto and Grand Theft and is held without bail at the Baltimore County Detention Center.

A woman who had just finished washing her white Dodge Journey at Canton Car Wash, 10051 Franklin Square Drive in Nottingham, called police at 1:07 p.m. after she stepped out of her vehicle and watched helplessly as a male suspect got in and drove off.

Officers saturated the area and soon spotted a vehicle matching the description, following it at a distance along with Baltimore County Air support, until it could be confirmed that it was the stolen Dodge. The vehicle drove around the White Marsh precinct area onto Interstate-695 and onto Eastern Boulevard heading toward Baltimore City, then back onto I-695 into Essex at Route 702.

Once the vehicle was confirmed to be the stolen Dodge, officers attempted to make a traffic stop, but the vehicle fled, ultimately driving back onto I-695 and exiting onto Pulaski Highway. The vehicle fled into the parking lot of the Sonic Drive-In at 8733 Pulaski Highway, where it struck another vehicle, causing minor damage, and then fled back onto Rossville Boulevard. Denicolis attempted to turn left onto Kelso Drive when it left the roadway and drove up a slight embankment and overturned, striking a BGE transformer, a light pole, and the traffic signal box on the corner of Kelso Drive and Rossville Boulevard. As downed wires were arcing, officers assisted Denicolis out of the vehicle and placed him under arrest at 1:28 p.m.

Police investigating Peninsula Expressway carjacking

Detectives from the Baltimore County Violent Crimes Unit continue to investigate an incident involving a violent car-jacking in the 7800 block of Peninsula Expressway in Dundalk just before midnight on Saturday, July 7.

The victim, a 42-year-old man, was driving home when he began experiencing car trouble and pulled to the side of the roadway. While checking to see what the trouble was, a vehicle with the two suspects stopped. The suspects approached him and while one pointed a handgun at him the other took his cell phone and wallet. The victim attempted to flee and was shot by the suspect once in a lower extremity. The victim continued to flee and managed to flag down another motorist who called 9-1-1.

One of the suspects fled in the vehicle they arrived in while the other stole the victim's vehicle, which was later located just inside Baltimore City.

Anyone with information on the suspects involved in this violent crime is asked to contact police at 410-307-2020.

Two arrested for theft after wild car chase on east side

Baltimore County Police have charged the two suspects involved in the July 3 police-involved shooting on Pulaski Highway. Robyn Slack, 32, of the 4200-block of Kenwood Avenue in Overlea has been charged with second-degree assault and two counts of theft. She is being held at the Baltimore County Department of Corrections on denied bail status.

Micah Tucker, 38, of the 2700-block of Chesterfield Avenue in the Edison-Belair neighborhood of Baltimore City, has been charged with two counts of theft and was released on his own recognizance.

On July 3 at 5 a.m., Baltimore County Police received a call from the Walgreens located in the 9600-block of Harford Road in Parkville for a theft. The caller stated that a male took items from the store and fled in a blue Chevrolet Tahoe. A responding officer saw the Tahoe and attempted to stop the SUV. Slack did not stop.

The suspect driver ignored several commands from the officer to get out of the SUV. The officer then fired his service weapon several times at the SUV. Slack continued westbound on Pulaski Highway after the shooting. The SUV eventually stopped at Pulaski Highway near North Point Road and both suspects were taken into custody. The driver was not injured but the male passenger suffered a gunshot wound to his arm. He is currently being treated at a local hospital and is expected to survive his injuries.

The police officer responsible for the shooting has been identified as Police Officer First Class McCain of Precinct 8. Officer McCain was involved in an Aug. 1, 2017 combat shooting that resulted in a fatality. He was also involved in a combat shooting in 2006 that did not result in a fatality. Officer McCain's police powers have been suspended, with pay, as an investigation takes place.

Two charged in July 4th Dundalk stabbing case

Just after 10 p.m. on July 4, Baltimore County Police responded to the parking lot of the Save-A-Lot in the 1700-block of Merritt Boulevard in Dundalk for a stabbing. Police determined that an argument occurred between one man and the suspects about the traffic leaving the parking lot at the end of the fireworks show. The victim saw the argument and tried to intercede to avoid a fight. At that time, the suspects pulled the victim into their car and stabbed the man.

The victim was transported to a local hospital where he was treated for wounds to the upper-body. The 33-year-old victim is expected to survive his injuries. Subsequent investigation by police led to the identification of both suspects.

Deion Nicholas Richardson, 21, of the 3500-block of Wagon Trail Road in Middle River, has been charged with first-degree and second-degree assault. Christopher Marquis Thomas, 22, of the 3600-block of Sollers Point Road in Dundalk, has also been charged with first-degree and second-degree assault. Both men are being held without bail at the Baltimore County Department of Corrections.

For Eyes opens new location in Nottingham

- By Patrick Taylor -

For Eyes, one of the global leaders in optical retail, expanded its network on June 29 with the grand opening of a new store located at 7984 Honeygo Boulevard in Nottingham. The Nottingham location is now the 11th retail space For Eyes has opened in Maryland, with two more on the way this year.

"We're excited to open in White Marsh to serve the residents of the community with the highest-quality vision care," said Jose Costa, CEO North America for Grand Vision NV. "As we expand our For Eyes network, we look forward to continuing our growth across Maryland."

Heading up the Nottingham location will be Dr. Karl Malicdem, a 12-year veteran optometrist and White Marsh native.

Malicdem went to Our Lady of Mount Carmel for elementary and middle school before attending Calvert Hall for high school. He did his undergraduate studies at Towson University before heading up to Boston's Optometry School at the New England College of Optometry.

"Friends were trying to persuade me to be a Red Sox fan, a Patriots fan, but I resisted successfully. I represented the Orioles every time they came up to Boston," said Malicdem with a laugh.

After finishing his studies in Boston, Malicdem moved back to Maryland but never had the opportunity to practice in his hometown. He worked in Towson, Baltimore City, Gambrils and elsewhere before being afforded the opportunity to work where he grew up. "Sometimes as an optometrist you don't get that dream of practicing in your hometown," said Malicdem. "You have to go where the best market is, where the best job is."

Malicdem explained that he had previously worked with For Eyes in Baltimore City, but eventually that opportunity came to an end due to financial issues. After some changes in the upper echelons of the company, Malicdem was approached about taking on this new challenge.

"It's a chance to come home," he said. "I had piano lessons right across the street at White Marsh Mall. My brother works at Ikea over there. So this truly is home."

For Malicdem, For Eyes opening in his hometown is a fortuitous happenstance, but for Costa, it just made business sense

"It's a fantastic area. We have a software that analyzes retail traffic and it scored way above the average for any other location. So you have a great population and great demographics. We saw a need for our type of products and services so we decided to come here," said Costa.

Costa said that it helped that Maryland was very "health care friendly," and added that For Eyes will accept all insurance programs.

"We have a lot of quality products and very innovative technology," said Costa, adding that they have a reputation for hiring great doctors as well.

The innovative technology Costa mentioned was described by Melicdem as "remixed," combining the old and new. There are still similarities between the old techniques and technologies, but everything is more precise now.

"We're still going to do the whole routine of 'better in one or better in two,' but the format is just a totally different level," said Malicdem. "We're talking about highly state-of-the-art technology that can actually get rid of those human errors. Measurements are more precise and it also gives you a chance to back-check old prescriptions, so you have a whole before and after scenario which is really cool and it's all within the click of a button."

Malicdem also said they have the ability to show, via animation, how light is currently interacting with a patient's eye and how their prescription will change that. And for those with experience at the eye doctor's, it means less dilation drops.

"Dilation is still considered standard care in the state of Maryland," said Malicdem. "If there are certain symptoms the patient is experiencing, I still have the drops and will use them when I need to."

Since the new For Eyes location is in its infancy, Malicdem's hours aren't yet solidified. He said he would likely be in on Monday, Thursday and Friday, with hours on Tuesday and Wednesday. But he added that he's willing to be at the new location for whatever demand requires.

"If the community embraces me and wants to see me more, shoot, I don't mind being here six out of seven days," said Malicdem.

For Eyes was founded in 1972 in Philadelphia, PA, on the foundation that an optical store should have a friendly open environment with fair pricing and highquality standards.

Throughout the years, For Eyes has grown to nearly 120 stores across the United States. In December 2015 For Eyes became a part of GrandVision, a global leader in optical retail. For Eyes leverage this global knowledge in eye care, technology and products, along with expertly trained optometrists and technicians to provide the highest level of expert vision care in each of its stores.

'Ant-Man and Wasp': Honey, I shrunk the Marvel franchise!

- By Teddy Durgin -

"Ant-Man and the Wasp" is being touted as Disney/Marvel's "change o' pace" movie, departing from the thought provoking, socially conscious "Black Panther" and the supremely heavy "Avengers: Infinity War" to give us something light and fun. It's half the movie those two films are (and then some), so I'm considering only doing about half a review.

In a nutshell, I liked the flick. Didn't love it. Actually, I pretty much just watched the two-hour-plus action comedy to get the one-minute sequence at the end (during the closing credits actually) that references "Infinity War." It's a great scene and well worth sneaking in to watch if you can time it with the end of another movie you've just seen at the cinema (oh come on, you KNOW you've done it!).

"Ant-Man and the Wasp" picks up two years after the events of "Captain America: Civil War" with Scott Lang (a.k.a. Ant-Man) under house arrest for helping Cap, the Falcon, Black Widow and co. violate the Sokovia Accords and resist submitting to government oversight of their superhero actions. Scott spends his days playing with his daughter, Cassie (Abby Ryder Fortson); razzing his parole officer, Jimmy Woo (Randall Park); and staying in touch with his business partner and former cellmate, Luis (Michael Pena), as they try to launch a security firm.

But he misses Hope van Dyne

(Evangeline Lilly) and her scientist father, Hank Pym (Michael Douglas), who made him Ant Man in the first place. They've been on the run due to Scott illegally using their technology in "Civil War," but need his help to retrieve Hope's mother, Janet (that ice cold Michelle Pfeiffer) from the Quantum Realm. Scott went to this microscopic dimension in the first movie and returned. Janet did the same 30 years earlier, but has remained trapped.

It's a good set-up for a sequel. And it definitely makes the Marvel fan in all of us wonder if this microverse can somehow come into play and be used to defeat Thanos in the next "Avengers" flick due summer 2019. The problem is, director Peyton Reed and his team of five (!) screenwriters over-stuff their "smaller scale" movie with way too many characters, shifts in tone and story complications.

There is a villain ... er, sort of ... in the form of Ghost (Hannah John-Kamen), who phases in and out of existence due to a science mishap when she was a child. But she is more of a tragic figure than a Marvel villainess we can really boo, hiss and root against. There is a gangstertype named Sonny played by Walton Goggins, who the film can't decide is a man to be feared or laughed at. One moment, he seems capable of real cruelty and sadism. The next, Goggins is off on his own doing some shtick from a whole other movie.

And the technobabble in this flick! Good Googleplex! It's like watching one of the lesser "Star Trek: The Next Generation" episodes where Data, Geordi and Picard debated fissures in the spacetime continuum, fretted about quantum filaments and tried to solve things with tachyon pulses and nanoprobes. At least every once in a while, Rudd's dim-witted Lang gets off a good one-liner like "OK, now you're just putting 'quantum' before everything!"

Ant-Man gets lost in his own film from time to time due to this large cast that also includes Laurence Fishburne as a former rival of Hank Pym's; Judy Greer and Bobby Cannavale as Scott's ex-wife and her second husband, respectively; and rapper T.I. and David Dastmalchian as Luis and Scott's goofy partners.

What's good? Fortunately, quite a bit.

The action climax through the streets and sites of San Francisco (everything from Lombard Street to Fisherman's Wharf to San Francisco Bay factor in) is great fun with the various characters and their vehicles morphing from insect size to giant size and everything in between. The effects technology to de-age Douglas, Pfeiffer and Fishburne in flashback sequences has pretty much been perfected now and will make you feel like you're watching a 1989 film in spots. And, yes, there is a good bit of humor that does work mostly thanks to Rudd's droll line deliveries.

I don't think there's enough here to warrant a third film with these characters. But they're definitely part of the Marvel family, and I look forward to some of them showing up in subsequent installments of other characters' movies and, of course, "Avengers 4!"

'The First Purge'eh, hopefully the last.

- By Teddy Durgin -

In a few years' time - heck, in a few weeks time - my guess is "The First Purge" won't be remembered much as a movie event. It's a disposable, dystopian action thriller, the fourth in its series, that has socio-political ambitions and yearns to be an important movie. But it's really just interested in giving us as many scenes as possible of creepy dudes in masks jumping into camera frame, essentially yelling "Boo!" and then committing heinous crimes. It never gets tired of showing us that.

But what "The First Purge" may be remembered for in a year or two years' time is the discovery of some great young talent who (hopefully) went on to bigger, better films. Now that Marvel movies, "Star Wars" flicks and other franchises are getting more diverse, they are on the hunt for top talent. And "The First Purge" has at least three performers who I think can be major contributors to bigger, better films coming up. This experience to me was akin to watching the first season of "The Wire" and marveling at previously under-seen talents like Idris Elba, Dominic West and Michael K. Williams.

The first is Y'Lan Noel, this sequel's action lead. Noel plays the cliche drug dealer with a secret heart of gold here, but he delivers such a strong and commanding performance that you forgive the stock writing and conception of the character. When it comes down that his community and people and former girlfriend are threatened, he really goes into action!

The second is Lex Scott Davis as said girlfriend, Nya. I just saw her in "SuperFly" a few weeks ago and wasn't impressed. Here, though, she is alternately fierce, vulnerable, smart, sexy and savvy, and she holds the movie when the focus is on her and her character's survival while also trying to keep the people she loves safe amidst a night of uncontrolled violence and mayhem.

The third is an actor I've never seen before, Rotimi Paul. He plays a homicidal street hood named Skeletor, and he is absolutely ... freakin' ... scary! Skeletor was feared in his neighborhood before. But given 12 hours to kill, maim and threaten without the threat of arrest or punishment, he goes for the grand prize of Purgers. He WANTS to be the baddest man of the night, and he is so clearly deranged that you fear even for the worst of the criminals prowling the streets with him.

I so wish they were in a better flick than "The First Purge," but I will say they make the whole thing watchable in its ugly, garish, B-movie exploitation glory. The film is a prequel to the three previous "Purge" flicks showing how Dr. Updale (Marisa Tomei, cashin' that paycheck) came up with the experiment to have all violent crime legal for one 12hour evening to lower the crime rate for the rest of the year. But it's really just a cynical exercise for the federal government to wage war on poor people, who've been paid $5,000 each to remain on the test site that is Staten Island, N.Y., for the one night.

When the violence doesn't kick in to an alarming degree in the first few hours, the President's soulless Chief of State Arlo Sabian (Patch Darragh) activates hordes of mercenaries to descend on the borough and ratchet up the bloodshed. The Staten Island drug dealers led by Noel's Dmitri take it personal and begin shooting back.

The film is at its best when it centers on its action and the survival of its leads. When it tries to be an important movie, the social commentary is ham-fisted and under-developed. We're supposed to believe that the mercenaries are a mix of colluding Russians, white supremacists and general cutthroats from all over. But the main ones look and dress like they were plucked from 1942 Berlin. One female character gets grabbed in the you know-where. And the third party that has seized control of American politics in this alternate near-present is funded by the NRA. Both the characters and the audience are hammered over the head in this one.

For the most part, I smirked and scoffed my way through it while enjoying the performances. I hope this is the last "Purge" film, but the first of many better movies to come for Noel, Davis and Paul.

"The First Purge" is rated R for violence, drug use, language and sexuality.

OBITUARIES

Chance, Gordon Lee Sr.

Mr. Gordon Lee Chance, Sr. of Baltimore (Middlesex), Maryland, passed away from congestive heart failure on Thursday morning, July 5 at his home. On July 1, he turned 84 years old. He was able to celebrate his birthday surrounded by many family members. Mr. Chance accepted the Lord on Monday morning, July 2. God patiently and graciously waited for his lost sheep (Mr. Chance) to call on His holy name!

Mr. Chance was married to Edith Chance for 52 years. He retired from Bethlehem Steel after 30 years where he worked as a crane operator. He then went to work with his brother Kenneth Chance for a few years at Pavsner Press. He enjoyed reading the newspaper (and never missed a day), watching the news, and frequenting his local watering holes. He loved a good beer! He also enjoyed country music (Johnny Cash, Hank Williams, and Merle Haggard were his favorites) and riding motorcycles when he was younger. Some of his favorite foods were sour beef and dumplings, crabs, crab cakes, crab pretzels, steamed shrimp, pickled herring, Halo oranges, peanuts, and bananas.

Mr. Chance was housebound for the last year and a half and he just lit up whenever his grandkids and great-grandkids came to visit.

Mr. Chance is predeceased by his parents, William H. Chance and Anna Madeline Chance, his brother William Chance, and his son, Gordon Lee Chance Jr. He is survived by his wife, Edith Amelia Chance, children Catherine (Cathi) Price and her husband Steve Price, Marie Bartynski and her husband Dave Bartynski, Linda Scott and her husband Larry Scott, Susan Chance, and John Chance and his wife Ashley Chance. He also left behind his grandchildren Ryan Vecchioni, Douglas Vecchioni, Christina Duncan, Joseph Rosenberger Jr., Davey Duncan, Justin Duncan, Sandra Chance, Austin Chance, Cameron Bordner, and his great-grandchildren Joseph Rosenberger III, David John Duncan III, Nora Mae Kropkowski, Bailey Marie Laws, Nico Contreras, and Noah James Allen Kuczinski.

Mr. Chance is also survived by his sisters, Evelyn Hartig, Madeline Greenwood, Margaret Braun, and brother Kenneth Chance. He is also survived by many nieces and nephews, great- nieces and nephews, sisters-in-law and brothers-in-law.

Mr. Chance donated his body to science so there will be no public memorial service. The family will hold a private ceremony in the weeks to come.

Donations can be made in Mr. Chance's name to Amedisys Foundation.

one! Te name is Bandit. I am a supe In intere, everyone i le name is Bandil. I am a super sweet fun loving puppy looking for my furever family. One of my favorite things to do is get belly rubs and I may even flop over on my back to get them! I love talking walks with my favorite humans and I also love learning new things. I can be a tad nervous at first, but don't you worry! I warm up super quick. In my previous home I lived with kids and a cat. If you think I sound like the perfect pup for you, come out to meet me and we can be best friends. I'll be waiting... ng.

BANDIT

My name is Candy and I am a sweet little lady in search of my new forever home. Check out my long, luscious black hair! Come in soon to meet me and fall in love!
