READER'S Recipe

OLD-FASHIONED GIBLET STUFFING

- 1/2 cup butter
- 1 sack giblets from one turkey
- 1 cup diced celery
- 1/2 cup chopped onion
- salt and pepper to taste
- 1 teaspoon poultry seasoning
- 8 cups dry bread cubes
- 1 cup chicken broth

Chop giblets and cook in butter in a medium skillet over medium heat, 2 minutes. Stir in celery and onion and cook until tender, but not brown. Remove from heat and stir in salt, pepper and poultry seasoning. Place bread crumbs in a large bowl. Toss with giblet mixture and enough broth to lightly moisten to bread. Use stuffing to stuff an 18 pound turkey, or bake separately, in a 2 quart dish, covered, 40 to 45 minutes in a 375 degree oven.

LEAN IN TO LEARNING OUTSIDE IN PENNSYLVANIA

(NAPS) Most people think of learning as something done over a book or, increasingly, a computer, but a number of researchers and educators have come to a different, perhaps surprising conclusion. To be well educated, they say, you have to get out of the classroom. Getting out into nature, scientists believe, can help decrease stress. They attribute this to "biophilia," the natural affinity humans have for other living things. As psychologist Dr. Judith Heerwagen put it, "Greenness, water and plants relax us." It's also healthier to go out and breathe in some clean air and soak up some vitamin D. That may explain why one study of schoolchildren found that outdoor education improves grades. After pursuing an outdoor-based curriculum, the students scored higher than those in traditional systems in everything from math and science to attendance. Child development expert Richard Louv suggested "As young people spend less of their lives in natural surroundings, their senses narrow, physiologically and psychologically, and we deny them access to a fundamental part of their humanity." One answer may be found at an innovative liberal arts institution in Pennsylvania. Lycoming College's Outdoor Leadership and Education (OLE) program helps students grow professionally and build leadership skills outside the classroom through enhanced educational experiences. Intentionally designed outdoor undertakings deliver learning opportunities in an adventure-filled, fun environment. This can help students of any skill level approach learning, critical thinking, and problem solving (all values of a liberal arts education) from a different perspective. Learning while doing is one of the most effective ways to gain and apply new knowledge and skills, educators agree. OLE students get many opportunities to grow professionally and build leadership skills.

- The college's trips include:
- Backpacking
  - Flatwater Kayaking
  - Whitewater Kayaking
  - Instructor Training (prepare to guide others on outdoor trips and group development programming)
  - Leave No Trace Training (ethics and the environment)
  - Wilderness Medicine Courses (know what to do if someone gets hurt and you're miles from medical help)
  - Cross-Country Skiing
  - Wilderness Survival.

For students who want to go a step further, instructor training prepares them to guide their peers on outdoor trips and in group development programming. It's all part of Lycoming College's efforts to encourage students to challenge themselves, accept leadership and engage in community. The four-year, private institution is dedicated to the undergraduate education of 1,400 students. Its rigorous academic program, vibrant residential community and supportive faculty foster successful student outcomes.

Learn More: For further facts, to register or to see a video about the program, go to www.lycoming.edu/outdoor. Learning and leadership don't only come from books and computers. Sometimes, going into the great outdoors can make it easier and better.
