Insurance flip-flop hurts vulnerable seniors

By Kenneth E. Thorpe

The vast majority of seniors have at least one chronic condition, and more than two thirds have two or more chronic conditions, so choosing the right coverage is important.

Fortunately, premium prices are expected to remain stable. But out-of-pocket pharmacy costs are expected to rise almost entirely to the benefit design set by many insurance plans. To keep premiums low, insurers are saddling sick enrollees with higher out-of-pocket bills.

Increasing out-of-pocket expenses for patients with multiple chronic conditions is counterproductive.

Higher cost sharing reduces the likelihood of adherence to medication regimens, thus aggravating people's underlying health problems and driving up costs elsewhere in the healthcare system.

Research shows that non-adherence causes at least 10 percent of hospitalizations and costs the rest of the healthcare system upwards of $289 billion annually. It also puts a higher cost burden on those who need help the most—research has shown that for the sickest, a $1 increase in co-payments results in a $1.78 increase in overall healthcare spending. This especially hurts seniors with multiple chronic conditions.

Health plans are supposed to shield patients from financial ruin when disease strikes. Since the Affordable Care Act took effect, insurers have been prohibited from denying insurance to anyone. Beneficiaries pay a monthly premium with the understanding that their individual health dollars support a larger "risk" pool. Those who are healthy thus subsidize those who are sick, knowing that if they themselves fall ill, they'll be protected.

When it comes to prescription drug coverage, however, insurers increasingly flip this dynamic. They're effectively raising costs on the sickest individuals to offer savings to healthy enrollees.

Here's how. Pharmaceutical companies offer large discounts to health insurers to ensure their drugs are covered by health plans. In Medicare, for example, brand-name drugs are discounted by 30 percent, on average. Last year, the pharmaceutical industry paid out $153 billion in total discounts and rebates.

Insurers keep some of these rebates for themselves and use the rest to lower premiums. That's good news for healthy enrollees.

But these discounts are not shared directly with patients at the pharmacy. Most insurers require patients to pay co-insurance on brand-name drugs, which is a set percentage of a drug's sticker, or "list," price, rather than a percentage of the discounted price the insurer pays.

As a result, sicker patients who fill lots of prescriptions rarely benefit from the massive discounts granted by drug companies. This isn't how insurance is supposed to work.

The Trump administration recognizes that drug benefit design is undermining the foundational promise of insurance. In its 2019 budget, the administration put forward a plan that would require insurers in the Medicare drug benefit to share a portion of negotiated discounts with patients at the point of sale.

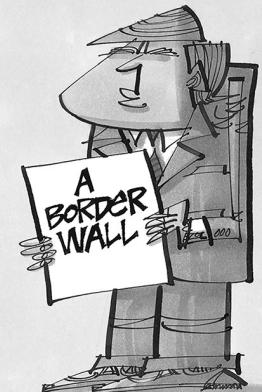

These are encouraging developments. Unless insurers share discounts directly with patients, high cost-sharing requirements will continue to prevent sick enrollees from taking their prescriptions as directed. That means worse health outcomes for those patients—and higher spending for the Medicare program, and thus taxpayers.

Peace groups sponsor writing contest for Maryland middle school students

Annapolis— All Maryland middle school students are invited to enter a statewide writing contest focusing on the themes of peace and social justice.

The contest, which is sponsored by Anne Arundel Peace Action, the Maryland Peace Action Education Fund, the Benjamin Peace Foundation and the Peace and Justice Center of Annapolis Friends Meeting, is open to all 7th and 8th grade students enrolled in public or private schools in Maryland and to home-schooled students corresponding to the same grade levels. This is the 23rd consecutive year the contest has been conducted.

Four cash prizes will be awarded: $350 for first place, $250 for second place, $150 for third place, and $100 for fourth place. The winners will be honored at a special ceremony, although attendance is not required to receive an award.

To enter, students must submit an entry of up to 1,200-words on this topic:

"The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees our most fundamental liberties, including prohibiting the government from restricting freedom of speech or the press, the free exercise of religion, the right to assemble peacefully, and the right to petition the government for a redress of grievances. However, these freedoms have been threatened throughout American history. Which one of these do you believe faces the greatest challenges at this time? Support your views with examples from current events. What actions do you suggest to protect the freedom you selected?"

Entries must be accompanied by a separate cover sheet including the student's name, address and phone number or e-mail address; school's name, address and phone number; and the name of the teacher sponsor if applicable.

Entries and accompanying materials must be postmarked no later than April 30, 2019 and mailed to Fred B. Benjamin Peace Writing Contest, 310 Riverview Avenue, Annapolis, MD 21403-3328.

Remembering Dr. King and ‘The Other America’

By Charlene Crowell

Once again on the third Monday in January, much of the nation will mark the anniversary of the death of the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Countless programs and events will no doubt recall several of his famous speeches from the 1963 March on Washington’s “I Have A Dream” to his “I’ve Been to the Mountaintop” delivered in Memphis during the 1968 sanitation workers’ strike.

In a life of only 39 years, Dr. King captured global attention in his valiant, nonviolent fight for the values of freedom, justice and equality. Preaching and fighting for long overdue citizenship rights first promised to all in the Declaration of Independence, he championed economic justice—especially for blacks to have safe, decent and affordable housing. He also called for full participation in the economy, and an end to financial exploitation.

Now 51 years since his assassination, his words still strike a resonant chord. His words—written as prose but markedly poetic—remain as timely as they are timeless.

“There are so many problems facing our nation and our world, that one could just take off anywhere,” Dr. King said in a speech delivered on April 14, 1967 at Stanford University.

Entitled, “The Other America” Dr. King began by recapping the nation’s bounty and beauty, noting how “America is overflowing with the milk of prosperity and the honey of opportunity,” and how “millions of young people grow up in the sunlight of opportunity.”

For his audience, those comments almost certainly reflected the lifestyles of Historically, homeownership has been a reliable measure of the nation’s middle class. Late last year it stood at 64.4 according to the Census Bureau. Yet when race and ethnicity are added who owns a home today discloses a far different picture. White homeownership was higher than the national average at 73.1 percent.

But blacks still suffering from the financial losses from the now decade-old foreclosure crisis had a homeownership rate of 41.7 percent, lower than its pre-housing crisis rate of 47.7 percent.

the students attending one of the nation’s elite educational institutions.

In his inimitable Baptist cadence, Dr. King then went on to speak of the “Other America” that was equally real but far removed from the commonplace privilege associated with Stanford.

“Little children in this other America are forced to grow up with clouds of inferiority forming every day in their little mental skies. As we look at this other America, we see it as an arena of blasted hopes and shattered dreams,” said Dr. King. “It’s more difficult today because we are struggling for genuine equality. It’s much easier to integrate a lunch counter than it is to guarantee a livable income and a good solid job. It’s much easier to guarantee the right to vote than it is to guarantee the right to live in sanitary, decent, housing conditions.”

In 2019 the two Americas Dr. King wrote about still remain. A nation once lauded for its enviable and expanding middle class has evolved into a nation of people who are either growing wealthy or growing poor. In this unfortunate process, the nation’s envied middle class is vanishing.

Today’s black homeownership resembles the same levels experienced at the time of the 1968 Fair Housing Act’s passage.

Latino homeownership today is higher than that of blacks at 46.3 percent; but still lower than its earlier pre-crisis rate of 47.7.

Housing also remains troubled for renters as well. According to the National Low-Income Housing Coalition, the nation lacks more than seven million affordable rental homes that affect 43.8 million families. Moreover, 11 million families pay more than half of their income on housing and are considered severely-cost burdened.

As of January 3, over 1,100 HUD contracts with landlords for its Section 8 rental voucher program expired. By February, another 1,000 more contracts are expected to expire. At press time, the stalemated federal government shutdown continued, leaving millions of people uncertain about their lives, or livelihoods or both. While landlords and HUD figure out the paperwork, 1.2 million families relying on this vital rental support program remain at risk.

Also caught in partisan bickering of a federal government shutdown are men and women—the military and civil servants—whose service to the country is deemed so essential that they must continue to work without knowing when another paycheck will arrive. Another 800,000 furloughed federal workers may be at home; but like others affected by the shutdown, they too still need to pay their rent or mortgage, honor their financial obligations and take care of children as best they can.

When times are tough financially, a range of predatory lenders seize opportunities to tempt those who are hard-pressed for cash with interest rates on loans that would make a bookie blush. When a loan of only a few hundred dollars comes with interest payments that double or triple the cash borrowed, predatory lenders are ready to exploit those with few or no financial options.

Those who are unpaid or underemployed; those who are working but failing to earn a salary comparable to their education and training, student loan repayments can take a financial backseat to housing, utilities, or other daily living needs. At press deadline, the federal shutdown was approaching the 1995 shutdown record of 21 days.

In 1967, Dr. King advised his Stanford University audience, “Somewhere we must come to see that social progress never rolls in on the wheels of inevitability. It comes through the tireless efforts and the persistent work of dedicated individuals.... And so we must help time, and we must realize that the time is always right to do right.”

This year, may we all honor Dr. King and do our respective efforts to make America live up to its promise of opportunity for all.

Baltimore resident maps ‘small’ but unique plan to house homeless

By Stacy M. Brown

Smalltimore Homes was more of a manifestation for founder LaQuida Chancey.

“I began researching and investing in the Baltimore Real Estate Market and ... it wasn’t long before putting the first house on the market that the realization that most people who attended the open houses weren’t prepared to buy a home,” Chancey said. “At that moment, I knew my focus would probably need to shift. As a developer who focuses on affordability and first time home buyers, it didn’t seem to be enough to make an impact just focusing on those two things.”

Chancey, who regularly worked as volunteer for numerous organizations that focused on the homeless, noted she had a natural desire to end homelessness.

“And, I thought, ‘wow, I think tiny homes could end homelessness,’ she said.

In February 2018, Chancey started Smalltimore Homes, an affordable housing and sustainable living solution, which focuses on enhancing community living and improving neighborhoods by creating alternative ownership opportunities.

The mission of the Smalltimore Homes is to provide those living below poverty level and those experiencing homelessness and families with individualized supportive services as well as tailored housing solutions with a goal of obtaining and maintaining affordable housing.

Chancey says she felt compelled to act when she noticed that many tent encampments around Baltimore were being cut off from public access and entire communities were being dismantled.

“It was quite sad to see... it really feels more like a war on homelessness and it’s not fair,” said Chancey, who attended Spelman College in Atlanta after growing up in Baltimore.

After researching a number of tiny home communities, Chancey says she figured there was more she could do.

“I think a Smalltimore Homes tiny home/micro shelter community could address Baltimore blight and vacancies by deconstructing/disassembling those properties first, dispose of anything hazardous or debris, then keep what is salvageable and safe, and start the community build with those salvageable materials,” she said. “It really could be a perfect model for transitional tiny home communities with the potential to grow into an entire eco-system that creates a stronger Baltimore.”

Chancey’s idea has caught on as many local organizations have found Smalltimore Homes online or on social media and want to collaborate and help advocate.

“We raised enough funds to construct at least 10 shelters already,” Chancey said. “Team Depot and The Home Depot Foundation gave us a grant to help build prototypes/models to be put on display throughout Baltimore for feedback and get the conversation started around homelessness and provide feedback for design enhancements.”

They’re now working on the logistics to have the models placed at different locations around Baltimore for 30 to 90 days at a time.

“The idea is that having the model there to see and touch, makes it easier to understand the concept and potentially it will trigger some thoughts and be a conversation piece,” Chancey said. “The stigma around homelessness is an issue too, and with time I’d like to address that with our youth specifically. I’ve been speaking with a few educators to brainstorm ways to somehow make this into an extra-curricular program to engage students in the discussion as well as the building process.”

Chancey says she plans to do this work “forever,” and certainly can always use assistance.

“At the moment, we meet monthly with volunteers to construct these simple micro-shelters which is more or less a shed on wheels and cost about $1,2000,” she said. “At the moment there’s no plumbing or electric but it would keep someone safe from the elements. Most anyone of any skill-set can assist.”

The next two build sessions are scheduled for Saturday, January 19 and Saturday, February 9 and will be held at the Baltimore Community Tool Bank from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

“Ideally, I would like to create a community of members who are vested and involved in homelessness advocacy and affordable housing initiatives to help create the best micro-shelter prototype and the best community,” Chancey said.

Baltimore nonprofit announces $1K 'Black Futures' micro-grant

By Stacy M. Brown

With a motto of "Building Black Futures Together," CLLCTIVLY.org, a community-based organization in Baltimore, is spearheading an effort to show the tremendous effect black lives are having throughout the city.

Each month, the nonprofit social impact organization which serves as a resource for those seeking to find, fund and partner with black social change organizations in the city, has pledged to award a local individual or organization with a "Black Futures" micro-grant worth $1,000.

"In 2015 after the death of Freddie Gray, a coalition of grassroots activists and concerned citizens came together to form Baltimore United for Change and, in the days following the uprising we launched a skills bank to create an on ramp for concern community members that wanted to serve," said Jamye Wooten, the founder of CLLCTIVLY.

Wooten said more than 260 individuals and organizations answered the call.

"Community organizations often work in silos, these silos lead to fragmentation, fragmentation leads to duplication, and duplication leads to wasted resources—time, talent and treasure," he said.

The first phase of our project (CLLCTIV ASSETS) will create an online asset map/directory of organizations in Greater Baltimore listed by neighborhood and area of concentration.

"Our mission is to end the fragmentation and duplication of programs, to learn from and about each other, and to be a resource for the Greater Baltimore community that seeks to find, fund and partner with Black social change organizations."

The idea of CLLCTIVLY and the grant was conceived because many black-led organizations are under-resourced and underappreciated.

"I want to shine a light on the individuals and organizations that are doing great work in our community. I know the grant process can be intimidating for many, so I set out to create an easy,

Jamye Wooten,
Founder of CLLCTIVLY.org

no-strings-attached process to show gratitude to the organizations and individuals serving our community," Wooten said.

The first $1,000 grant will be awarded on February 22, 2019, and the deadline for submission is January 31, 2019. All are welcome to visit BlackFutures-Grant.org to apply.

Details about qualification also is available on the website.

"CLLCTIVLY.org is very excited to offer the Black Futures Micro-Grant. Baltimore has amazing, dedicated individuals and organizations in our community who are making a difference without a spotlight, and often under resourced," Wooten said. "We want to show our appreciation and motivate others to also use their time, talent and resources to strengthen our communities."

It's Wooten's hope that CLLCTIVLY will help bring unity and foster collaboration among the many community organizations doing great work.

"We are in a state of emergency. We must get back to pooling our collective resources and building community together," Wooten said.

He noted a recent report done by the Institute of Policy Studies that revealed, "If average black family wealth continues to grow at the same pace it has over the past three decades, it would take black families 228 years to amass the same amount of wealth white families have today."

Recognizing the large scope of its mission, CLLCTIVLY has organized its work into six-phases.

The first phase includes creating an online asset map/directory of organizations in Greater Baltimore, listed by neighborhood and area of concentration. There is also an online store where 20 percent of proceeds are directed to the Black Futures Micro-Grant Fund.

"If the organization's first month is any indication, the future of CLLCTIVLY is bright," Wooten said. "Members are joining, the Black Futures online store is fulfilling orders, and the first Black Futures Micro-Grant Award is just weeks away. The community is responding, and we're excited about it."

Three ways to release yourself from the past and live for today

News & Experts—Our memories help us relive life's most delightful moments, such as a trip to the Grand Canyon or a child's high school graduation. However, not every memory is a happy one, and often people become so tied to the past—dwelling on mistakes they made or offenses committed against them—that they fail to enjoy and take advantage of the present.

"If we permit our past to hold us hostage from the change we deeply desire, we are stuck," said Tom Corner, a motivational speaker and author of Borrowed Eyes and Feet: Finding Enlightenment After Rage (www.tomcorner.net). "It's important to be able to release your past and to see existence in the present moment. There is no future and there is no past, only the gift of now."

He knows from experience. For Corner, freeing himself from the past involved overcoming anger and rage that plagued him since his parents divorced when he was a young boy. He was in his 40s, he says, before he learned to live in the moment or perhaps, re-learn how to live in the moment.

Most people, as children, aren't so hung up on the past and the future, preferring to immerse themselves in the activity at hand, whether that involves a game of tag, a hike in the woods, a favorite TV show or a captivating book.

"Unfortunately, children eventually grow up to become adults who live in a state of constant worry about what they did yesterday and what they will do tomorrow," Corner says. "We nudge the present moment to the side, making it something of an anomaly, until we return full circle later in life to try to recapture the gift of those moments."

But how do you recapture the ability to take pleasure in the present moment, and avoid letting the past and the future dominate your thoughts and cause you heartache and anguish?

Corner has a few suggestions:

- Practice forgiveness. It's been said that the act of forgiveness isn't so much for the person we are forgiving, but for ourselves. Either way you look at it, it's not always an easy thing to do. "Are we courageous enough to see the world through the eyes of forgiveness, allowing us to release the many false expectations we unintentionally impose on ourselves and on others?" Corner asks.

- Strive for self-acceptance. If we are honest and brave enough to look deep within ourselves, Corner says, we will realize that, more often than we'd like to admit, we sabotage ourselves with negative self-talk. "The next time you feel doubt or a sense of failure, pay attention to how you feel about yourself," he says. "If you are not being nice to yourself, be aware of these feelings and try to replace this doubt with positive thoughts or affirmations."

- Recapture childlike wonder. "When we were children, all things were possible because we did not know much about resistance or fear," Corner says. "As children we did not allow our past to hold us hostage from the gift of joy in the present moment." Think about your past, he says, release whatever is holding you back from your dreams, your desires, and your ability to accomplish anything.

"Too often, we wait for tomorrow to celebrate our yesterdays," Corner says. "Why not today? Why not celebrate what we have right now, right this minute?"

The Neil Muldrow Business Development Fund

CBP Names Program after Minority-business Advocate and Pioneer

By Ursula V. Battle

Following the death of Ackneil M. Muldrow, II, the longtime businessman was remembered as “a tireless advocate for uplifting and empowering African Americans.” Muldrow’s long and storied business career included serving as the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Development Credit Fund, Inc. Muldrow served as chief administrator of a $7.5 million loan pool formulated to provide low cost financial assistance to minority-owned businesses operating in the State of Maryland.

To help continue Muldrow’s rich legacy of supporting minority-owned businesses, Central Baltimore Partnership (CBP) has established The Neil Muldrow Business Development Fund. The Fund aims to support small businesses who expand or locate in Central Baltimore, particularly those who re-develop long-vacant properties requiring significant new investment.

Muldrow served as a CBP Board Member up until his death. The naming of its business development program after Muldrow was highlighted in December at CBP’s 8th Annual Honor Roll held at Motor House on North Avenue. The Honor Roll is an annual celebration of the unique collaborative effort that is transforming Central Baltimore.

Over 100 people attended the annual event, which recognized Innovative Partnerships and paid tribute to Muldrow. During the event, honorees were highlighted and presented with certificates.

“Mr. Muldrow was such a dynamic man,” said Baltimore Times publisher and CEO Joy Bramble, who attended the event. “We had the honor and privilege of having him on our staff at The Baltimore Times until his passing. We were so blessed to have him, and miss him dearly.

“His contributions to minority-owned businesses in Maryland and beyond is immeasurable. I applaud Central Baltimore Partnership for establishing a living memorial in his honor that will help to continue his mission of assisting black businesses.”

Ellen Janes is executive director of Central Baltimore Partnership.

“Given Neil’s concern about minority businesses, particularly those in the Charles Street corridor, this seemed like the perfect way to keep his memory alive,” said Janes. “He was a doer, and this Fund will have a practical impact. I admired him. He always had relevant, up-to-date information that he was always willing to share. This is our way of saying thank you to him for all the help he gave us. We felt this living memorial would be very appropriate for him.”

CBP is a ten-year-old nonprofit with over 100 partners who together achieve a comprehensive strategy for community revival in 11 Central Baltimore neighborhoods. According to CBP, the Fund was created to foster small business development in Central Baltimore, and is expected to be up and running this year. When finalized, the Fund will offer businesses without the financial capacity to qualify for a traditional commercial loan to support upgrades and tenant build-out plans.

According to CBP, the organization is often approached for financial assistance to help their businesses locate in, expand and/or make interior improvements. On many occasions the extent of deterioration of commercial property is a barrier, or the conditions in a lease make tenant build-out plans prohibitively expensive.

Smaller businesses often cannot obtain a conventional loan to undertake the needed improvements to support improvement or expansion plans. CBP received feedback from property owners that prospective tenants rarely have the finances or expertise to build-out a commercial space—and the property owners do not have the capital to perform the work, nor can they charge a rent that would compensate them over time for their investment.

According to CBP, this creates a vicious cycle of perpetuating the lack of meaningful investment in their commercial districts. In the Fall of 2018, CBP commenced a work group that included their partners from the Baltimore Arts Realty Corporation, Baltimore Community Lending, Jubilee Baltimore, Latino Economic Development Corporation, and The Reinvestment Fund to help identify a financial assistance product that would foster small-scale commercial development in their commercial districts.

After many conversations with business owners, developers, community members, and stakeholders, the group recommended creating a business program that was modeled after the Southeast Community Development Corporation’s Tenant Fit Out Grant Program and the Great Street Initiative’s Retail Small Business Grant & Neighborhood Prosperity Fund in Washington D.C. Thus, The Neil Muldrow Business Development Fund was born.

“Neil was great at identifying barriers for minority-owned businesses, and coming up with strategies to overcome those barriers,” said Janes. “That’s what the Neil Muldrow Business Development Fund is all about. It is not easy to start up a business, and it is very difficult to thrive in an area that has been neglected. Mr. Muldrow understood that.”

Muldrow retired from the Development Credit Fund in 2005, after serving for 22 years. During its existence, the Fund lent nearly $40 million for working capital, equipment and machinery.

In addition to Central Baltimore Partnership, Muldrow served on numerous other boards, which included Bon Secour’s Hospital, and Walters Art Gallery.

“We want to keep Central Baltimore affordable, attractive, and a place where everyone can thrive,” said Janes. “Our mission is unique. We have a great model for other communities. They can learn from what we have done, and are trying to do. We are hopeful that The Neil Muldrow Business Development Fund will also follow this model and be something other communities can replicate.”

For more information about the Fund, email Jack Danna, Director of Commercial Revitalization at jdanna@centralbaltimore.org or call 410-702-5193.

Upcoming ‘AfroPop’ Docuseries Designed to Give Audience A Unique Experience

By Demetrius Dillard

Out of a dire need for more programming focusing specifically on the global black experience, a group of aspiring producers and filmmakers created “AfroPop: The Ultimate Cultural Exchange,” to give viewers a unique portrait of black life other than what is widely portrayed in mainstream media.

AfroPoP is a public television show based in the U.S. featuring independent documentaries and short films about life, art and culture from throughout the African Diaspora which includes all of Africa, the Caribbean, Canada, South America, Europe, the U.S. and anywhere people of African descent have made a significant contribution to the culture. AfroPoP, according to its webpage, is the only series on American public television focusing solely on stories from the African Diaspora.

The independent documentary series is produced by Black Public Media (BPM), of which Leslie Fields-Cruz is executive director, distributed by American Public Television (APT), and partially sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

“Many complicated, opposing and controversial viewpoints are often presented about Africa. Perhaps because of this, Africa is one of the most fertile grounds in our modern age for new, fresh and exciting exploration,” says an AfroPop webpage.

Angela Tucker, an Emmy-nominated producer, writer and director, will also play a crucial in the production and dissemination of the content included in this season of AfroPop.

The documentary series co-executive producer is based in New Orleans and has an extensive background in filmmaking and producing.

Some of her most noteworthy directorial work includes: “Paper Chase,” a teen comedy in pre-production with Gunpowder and Sky; “All Styles,” a feature length dance film in post-production starring Fikshun (“So You Think You Can Dance”); “Black Folk Don’t,” a documentary web series featured in Time Magazine’s “10 Ideas That Are Changing Your Life,” and (ASexual, a feature-length documentary that streamed on Netflix and Hulu for four years.

“Since I was young, I was always aware of there not being enough content that was about black life,” Tucker said of what sparked her to interest in black filmmaking.

“I really just always think about myself as a young person and how I really longed to see people that looked like me. From seeing people that looked like me in all different types of situations, you know you’re better able to understand yourself and the world that you live in.”

The Brooklyn, N.Y., native went to film school at Columbia University, and from there entered into the film industry working initially at a social issues documentary production company, which is when she met Fields-Cruz, the founder of AfroPop.

“We just sort of had a shared interest in finding more out... about black media,” Tucker said of the relationship that she and Fields-Cruz developed early on.

AfroPop is a documentary series in its 11th season. It will feature stories spotlighting the global black experience, and was created mainly to help bring stories of the African diaspora to American viewers.

“And also for people who are not black, I think it’s important for them to have a better understanding of different aspects of black life, just to understand us better.”

Throughout AfroPop’s offseason, episodes from this season will be re-broadcast on various channels. Tucker has been with AfroPop since 2011. She explained how the series has evolved, especially in its delivery to diverse audiences.

“One thing I would say is the internet has played a big role in letting more people have a better understanding [and] know how to find the series, and kind of raise the profile of the series,” she said.

“I think every year more and more people know about that, and that only benefits not only the films but the filmmakers. And I think we’ve always been really fortunate to get talent who also kind of helped raise the profile of that.”

The main topics covered in the upcoming season of AfroPop will include a look into the genocide in Rwanda, black politicians in the U.S., uprisings against law enforcement abuse of Congolese women and children, activism against apartheid in South Africa and black cultural identity.

The single greatest aspect of AfroPop, said Tucker, is that it sends a message that the black community is not monolithic.

“There’s no one set of experiences that are singular to the black community,” she said. “So what this season rolls out— you’re able to really see that first hand by traveling all over the world.”

Tucker said she expects the docuseries gives the black audience an experience it will never forget.

“I hope that [black America] not only gets to see different parts of the world, but also what different characters felt.”

Brooks Long: A True Songster

By Imani Wj Wright

About five years ago, as I left my high school after a long day, I headed to the popular McDonald's across the street, like many other students who attended Carver Center. I was particularly fatigued and I could hardly wait for my dad to pick me up to take me home.

After sitting down, I must have dozed off when suddenly I heard someone say, "Long day?" I looked up chuckled a bit and groggily responded: "Yeah man."

After some back and forth small talk, we ended up speaking about my aspirations as a musical artist—I was 15 years old at the time. The man sat pensively for a couple seconds and asked: "Are you familiar with Brooks Long?" "No I am not," I responded.

He went on to talk to me about how talented this guy was and listed a few of his musical accomplishments, including a "Best Real R&B" award from one of Baltimore's publications. Later on that day, I did some more research on Long and I have been a fan ever since.

Long is a triple threat musically. His soulful and fervent voice is supplemented by his ability to seamlessly tell a story while strumming away at his guitar. And to add even more fuel to the fire his band, The Mad Dog No Good adds that extra funk to Long's distinguishable sound. When listening to them get down

The artists who participated in Brooks Long's award winning interview/concert series "The Songster Series," at the Creative Alliance throughout 2018, ranged in age and style, which gave the show a dynamic and unbiased view of various musical forms.

you even get old school vibes. At times, I even heard an Otis Redding and Sam Cooke influence, especially on songs such as "Got Soul." In the hook Long sings, "Don't tell me you ain't got soul." The way the piece is instrumentally structured, and the method in which Long conveys his message will make you a believer. The intensity of the piece rises to Gospel levels that you would find at the 9:30 a.m. service in church.

I guess they call it soul because you can feel it in your spirit!

Long is currently working on a project titled, The Songster part 2. Well.... he has been working on it, and will always be working on it. The project is a compilation of his music that he continuously adds to throughout his journey. When I asked when the project would be completed, Long broke it down plainly and simply, "I'll continue to add on to it until the day I'm gone." This spring, he expects to add three more songs to the series.

Along with Long's high energy, he also has a reserved and strategic side. Watching him during his award winning interview/concert series "The Songster Series," at the Creative Alliance throughout 2018, it was clear to see his intellect and his knowledge of the world of music. During the shows, he explained why he began the series and talked about the importance of highlighting "true songsters." The artists who participated in the series, ranged in age and style, which gave the show a dynamic and unbiased view of various musical forms.

Long told that he plans to pursue a graduate degree in Ethnomusicology and while in grad school his goal is to "highlight Baltimore Music Culture."

You can catch Brooks Long on Friday, January 25, 2019, when he will be opening up for Kentavious Jones at Creative Alliance!

CERTIFICATION OF PUBLICATION

CITY OF BALTIMORE OFFICE OF BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS PUBLIC NOTICE

Project # 1284

Baltimore City Traffic Signal Timing Optimization Department of Transportation, Traffic Division.

The City of Baltimore Office of Boards & Commissions has been requested by the Traffic Division of the Department of Transportation (DOT) to advertise Project 1284 - Baltimore City Traffic Signal Timing Optimization Department of Transportation Traffic, Division, design and implementation consulting services for this federally funded project. The contract for this solicitation is project specific.

Once the Architectural Engineering Awards Committee (AEAC) has approved the recommended award of this Project; this procurement will follow Competitive Negotiation – Qualification-based Selection procedures provided and directed by DOT.

Consultant services funded in whole, or in part, with Federal-Aid Highway Program funds shall be procured and administered in accordance with the requirements of Uniform Administrative Requirements, Cost Principles, and Audit Requirements for Federal Awards (2 CFR 200). In addition, contracts for engineering and design related services which utilize Federal-aid highway program funds and are directly related to a planned construction project must also comply with the requirements established in 23 U.S.C. §112 and 23 CFR 172. Engineering and design related services are defined as "program management, construction management, feasibility studies, preliminary engineering, design, engineering, surveying, mapping or architectural related services" (as specified in 23 U.S.C. §112(b) (2) (A) and 23 CFR §172.3). Many additional Federal laws and regulations apply to the procurement and administration of engineering and design related services including the Brooks Act (40 USC Chapter 11).

The scope of services is primarily for specialized work which is traffic signal retiming of approximately 1100 signalized intersections in Baltimore City CBD, gateways and remaining network. These services would require knowledge of all local, state and federal regulations as related to signal timing so as to provide full and complete advice to the City on regulations and standards and how they are applicable to the proposed project. The objective of the City is to have our signals timed in a manner that minimizes and balances congestion. The scope of services includes the following:

1. Re-establish peak hours in different segments of the city, perform intersection turning movement counts accordingly during the weekdays (typical from 6 AM to 7 PM but subject to change) and select segments on Saturday. The data collection should be done during early fall or spring when the schools are in session and during an expected high-attendance baseball and football game for special Inbound and Outbound plans.
2. Field collect traffic signal timings at traffic signals where there is no communications. This currently includes Naztec 980 TS2 traffic signal controllers, and Siemens NextPhase 1.7.5 controllers operating under the Siemens i2 ATMS and all other ATMS system operational at the time of project execution. All field work in the traffic signal cabinet must be performed by IMSA Level 2 or 3 certified staff with random involvement of City forces on as needed basis. The full existing timing database shall be downloaded in electronic format. The consultant shall be required to obtain the necessary hardware, software and version of the ATMS software to obtain the signal timing electronic files from ATMS. Document the state of detection, communication and GPS units at each intersection along with data collection.
3. Coordinate with the City to obtain traffic signal timings at traffic signals where there is communication from the City's ATMS. Currently, the City has three systems in use for different locations and purpose: Siemens i2, Rhythm Engineering's InSync Adaptive, and Trafficware's ATMS.now.
4. Develop new/update Synchro models as necessary. The City will supply existing available Synchro models. The Synchro models will have to be developed/updated for any changes in geometry, configuration, current traffic signal operations/timings, and updated turning movement counts. Perform field reviews, and volume balancing as necessary to calibrate the models.
5. Develop optimized signal timing plans for all phases based on balancing saturation. Optimized offset for improved coordination as well as from safety perspective. Optimized cycle length to minimize queue formation and develop flush strategies. The existing strategies must be evaluated for possible new or modifications particularly with the change of use of roadways to full multimodal usage. The City requires operational control strategies that are supported by our current controllers for the following scenarios:

Legal Notices

- o Weekday AM Peak
- o Weekday Midday
- o Weekday PM Peak
- o Overnight
- o Weekend
- o Baseball/Football Inbound and Outbound

o Congestion mitigation plans that may include enhancing progression for alternate corridors and/or "Flush" plans for recurring congestion on corridors that may include but not limited to Lombard and Pratt Streets, and President Street, Fleet and Aliceanna Streets. The consultant shall study and recommend specific corridors and design the signal timing plans accordingly.

o Incident management plans to accommodate diversion traffic from I-83 and I-95 for corridors including Central Avenue, Gay Street, St. Paul, Charles, and Calvert Streets, Boston Street and Key Highway for I-95. The consultant shall study and recommend specific corridors and design the signal timing plans.

6. Measure "Before" travel times no earlier than three months prior to field implementation of the optimized signal timing plans

7. Measure "Before" transit travel times on corridors with TSP no earlier than three months prior to field implementation of the optimized signal timing plans. Travel times shall be obtained for all bus and LRT vehicles in their respective operational corridors in collaboration with MTA

8. Prepare press releases to submit to the City at least 2 weeks prior to and after implementation of new timing plans.

9. Implement the optimized signal timings. Field implementation shall be performed by a 2-person team led by either a Maryland registered Professional Engineer, an ITE Traffic Signal Operations Specialist, or an IMSA Level 2 Technician. Since many signals do not have communications, many of the optimized signal timings shall be field implemented. Due to the large signal groups, the implementation must be performed and verified on the same day, within several hours so as not to disrupt existing signal coordination. The consultant shall provide resumes for a minimum of 5 teams (10 persons) to concurrently field implement traffic signal timings. Each person on the team, as well as the firm's project leadership (Principal, Project Manager, and Project Engineer) must have demonstrated hands-on experience with field programming traffic signal controllers and hands-on experience with using Central Signal System software in the last 10 years. Note that some implementations, such as in the CBD must be performed overnight and on weekends. Others may be performed during the Midday and/or non-peak hours.

10. Field fine tune the optimized traffic signal timing plans observation.

11. Within one week of finalizing the field fine tuning, perform "After" vehicular and transit travel times on the same corridors as the "Before" studies were conducted using the same methodologies and times.

12. Develop training plan for various levels of City Personnel and hold training classes to fit the schedule of City personnel. The training should include but not limited to traffic controller operation training and modelling software like Synchro and Simtraffic. The training material and schedule should be developed and approved in co-ordination with the City.
