The use of antiepileptic drugs is associated with an increased risk of Alzheimer's disease and dementia, according to a new study in the Journal of the American Geriatrics Society. Some antiepileptic drugs are known to impair cognitive function, which refers to all different aspects of information processing. When the researchers compared different antiepileptic drugs, they found that the risk of Alzheimer disease and dementia was specifically associated with drugs that impair cognitive function. These drugs were associated with a 20percent increased risk of Alzheimer's disease and with a 60 percent increased risk of dementia. The researchers also found that the higher the dose of a drug that impairs cognitive function, the higher the risk of dementia. However, other antiepileptic drugs, i.e. those which do not impair cognitive processing, were not associated with the risk.

A Kaiser Permanente study of more than 80,000 children born over a 4-year period showed that the prenatal Tdap vaccination (tetanus, diphtheria, acellular pertussis) was not associated with increased risk of autism spectrum disorder in children. The study was published in Pediatrics.

A new analysis in the American Journal of Epidemiology shows that prolonged exposure to acetaminophen during pregnancy is associated with a 30% increase in relative risk for attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) (compared to those who did not take acetaminophen during pregnancy) and a 20% increase in relative risk for autistic spectrum disorder.

SHOP TODAY'S LOW PRICE TAGS:
We have HUNDREDS of non-advertised items marked down throughout our entire store. More savings passed on to our customers. Just look for blue tags on the shelves.

NO LIMITS:
Our competitors also have advertised specials. The difference is, in most cases, they have a limit on how many of an item you can buy at the sale price...we don't have any limits to family shoppers.
