Historically, many weight-loss agents have had adverse cardiovascular effects, leading to dangerous conditions such as strokes, heart attacks, pulmonary hypertension and valvular heart disease, and have been withdrawn from the market. Balancing the need for treatments for obesity and the potential risk of such therapies, the FDA has approved weight-loss agents like lorcaserin contingent on dedicated follow-up studies to assess the risk of adverse cardiovascular outcomes. Now a study described in the New England Journal of Medicine has shown that lorcaserin helps people lose weight without causing an increase in adverse cardiovascular events in a population at higher risk for heart attacks and strokes.

There is no significant difference between zinc acetate lozenges and zinc gluconate lozenges regarding their efficacy in shortening the duration of common colds, according to a meta-analysis published in Journal of the Royal Society of Medicine Open. Seven randomized trials with zinc acetate and zinc gluconate lozenges found that the duration of colds was shortened on average by 33%.

New research published in Diabetologia (the journal of the European Association for the Study of Diabetes (EASD) suggests that omega 3 polyunsaturated fatty acids (PUFAs), derived primarily from fish in maternal diet during pregnancy or lactation, may help protect infants at high risk of type 1 diabetes (T1D) from developing the disease.

Treatment options currently are limited for people suffering from secondary progressive multiple sclerosis. However, a pilot study suggests over-the-counter antioxidant lipoic acid holds promise in improving patients' lives. The research was published in the journal Neuroimmunology & Neuroinflammation.
