Vitamin D deficiency in pregnant women could preprogram babies to grow into obese children and adults, according to a new study, published in the journal Pediatric Obesity. Some 75 percent of U.S. teenagers and adults have too little vitamin D in their systems, according to a 2009 study. Deficiency in this "sunshine vitamin" has been linked to increased risk of heart disease, cancer, multiple sclerosis and Type 1 diabetes. A newborn's vitamin D status mostly depends on mom, so infants are at risk of vitamin D deficiency if their mothers are vitamin D deficient or are close to it.

Vitamin D deficiency in expectant mothers during pregnancy has a negative effect on the social development and motor skills of pre-school age children, a new study in the British Journal of Nutrition reports.

A new study suggests that antibiotics are being overused in up to 60 percent of patients undergoing common urological procedures. The study shows that the high rates of overuse were mostly due to extended use of antibiotics following the procedure. The findings were published in JAMA Network Open. It is common for patients undergoing a urological or any other surgical procedure to be given antibiotics as a precaution to prevent a surgery-related infection. But overuse of antibiotics can promote antibiotic resistance, which CDC has defined as a major health concern. Moreover, unnecessary use of antibiotics exposes patients to potential harm, such as an increased risk of infection by C. difficile bacteria. Based on evidence that a longer course of antibiotics does not add any benefit to patient outcomes and may in fact increase risks to patients health, the American Urological Association recommends that antibiotics should be given for no more than 24 hours following most urological procedures.
