DUTCH TRANSPLANTERS ON THE GRASSLANDS AND THE FRUITS OF CHAIN MIGRATION

Orange City native Brian Beltman & NWC Alumni has a book for sale

This narrative describes the transoceanic and internal migration pattern and resulting settlements across the Midwestern grasslands by Dutch immigrants in the nineteenth century. The transplantation process involved repeated pioneering and community formation that exhibited persistent culture transfer and ethnic identity, even as necessary adaptations occurred because of environmental imperatives and contextual change. The Dutch settlers maintained distinct enclaves in Marion and Sioux counties in Iowa and in Douglas and Bon Homme counties in South Dakota. The book includes maps and tables as well as two biographical accounts of individual immigrants that provide concrete examples to flesh out the larger portrait of the migration and resettlement experience.
