LIVING IN THE ROUGH AT ELBOW

Tumbleweed Smith

RC Reed grew up on a farm near Elbow, a tiny community a few miles from Big Spring. I asked him how it got that name. He replied, "Elbow Creek." I asked him how Elbow Creek got its name. "Because it's shaped like an elbow," he said. He went to school in Elbow and considered it a boring waste of time.

Tumbleweed Smith

"The family lived in a modest home. There wasn't any insulation in that house and no indoor plumbing. You went to an outdoor toilet about thirty yards from the house. Tough going at night when there was deep snow." This was during the severe drought of the 1950's. "I was born in 1954 and my mama told me that in 1950 we had the best crop we ever made and it didn't rain again for 8 years. Daddy had to go to work on drilling rigs during that time. He didn't raise a crop for 8 years. My mama sold eggs to stores in Big Spring. I learned how to skin a rabbit and ring a chicken's neck. Daddy could do 2 chickens at a time."

Eight people lived in the 900 square foot house that faced a cotton field. "Wind would blow out of that field and would blow about a three-inch dike of sand inside the front door of that old farm house. That sand got into everything. It was in your bed, it was in your clothes."

On cold nights he would heat his pajamas before getting into bed. They were, footed, the kind that had built-in places for your feet. "I'd stand in front of that one stove that we had in that house and get those pajamas as hot as I could stand them because I didn't have a heater in my bedroom. You got those pajamas hot enough so when you jumped into bed you didn't feel that you were landing in a bunch of icicles."

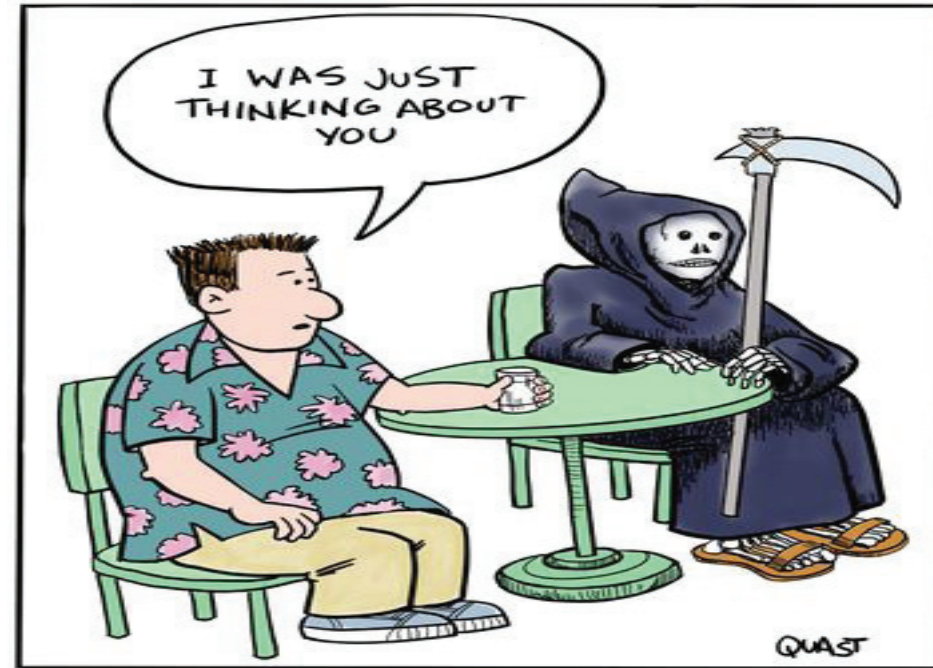

Water was a precious commodity. RC's daddy rigged up a 15-barrel water tank on an old car frame that they pulled by pickup or tractor to community water well. "We hauled water about every ten days or so depending on whether it was summer or winter. You took a bath in a number two washtub that had about an inch and a half of water in it. When three boys would take a bath in that water they'd empty that out and put in a new inch and a half of water so my three sisters could take a bath in that same number two wash tub."

Shirts were made of flour sacks. "They had flowery designs on them. From about the first through the fourth or fifth grade mother would make our shirts out of those sacks."

RC raised hawks and owls as a boy and hunted rabbits and birds. "When I'd go out hunting with a bb gun or 22 rifle one of my hawks would follow me. He'd be watching and if I popped something he'd come out of the air and go down and get it."

RC was named for his grandfather. "His name was Richard Clifton. I got accused of being RC Cola. If I had a nickel for every time I was called RC Cola I could probably be retired by now."
