THE WILDEST, CRAZIEST CELLIST

Tumbleweed Smith

Tumbleweed Smith

He wallows around in the dirt, jumps flat-footed from the ground to a table 4 feet high, makes guttural sounds and all kinds of strange and scary faces, acts like he has just escaped from the asylum and does all this while playing his cello, sometimes with a bow, sometimes strumming it like a guitar. He is a cross between Weird Al Yankovic, Jerry Lewis and Jim Carey but realistically they can't match his ultimate exercises in self-expression. He lives in Carmel, California and performs his strange antics all over the country. He spends a lot of time in Texas, recently performing at the Folkmusic Festival in Kerrville. His name is Rushad Eggleston.

I saw him in the patio behind the French Company Store in Marathon. He was already into his act when I arrived and I sat close because I was hearing some interesting sounds and wanted to record them. The patio's floor is made of pea gravel and there are half a dozen picnic tables for the audience. A concession stand offered food and drink. The interesting sounds I was hearing were coming from a cello. A series of foot-controlled devices took sounds from the cello and changed them into all sorts of shrieks and rumbles. Sometimes he played a kazoo attached to the top of the cello.

When I first sat down I thought he was wearing some sort of flesh-colored shirt. But what I was seeing was real flesh. He had no shirt, just a couple of Mardi Gras beads around his neck. He wore pajama pants and tennis shoes. A train roared by and blew its whistle so he stroked his bow across the strings and made the sound of a train. He is one creative individual and a trained classical cellist. He studied at the Berklee School of Music in Boston (full scholarship).

He started his crazy stuff when he was with a folk band and jumped off the stage during a performance, still playing the guitar (he plays that and violin). The audience and his fellow band members didn't know what to think and that sort of excited him. He did some similar stuff with bands and finally started doing his solo act.

I interviewed this talented crazy person after his show in Marathon. "There were about 70 people in the audience when I started," he said. "About half of them left after about 15 minutes. I guess they couldn't stand the crazy stuff. But the audience grew the longer I played and people were very receptive." He is a wild man. He jumps on tables where people are sitting and sings, plays, makes faces and prances around. "People laugh and smile and seem to get some sense of relief and freedom and I think it makes them feel good. I'm kind of a stress reliever."

Sometimes during his act he'll play a little classical music with his bow. Then he'll drop the bow, pick up a cowboy hat and start doing a parody of a popular country song. Once he put a bucket on a table where people were sitting, jumped up on the table, kicked the bucket and fell down pretending to be dead. Never a dull moment.
