A REAL FARMERS MARKET

Tumbleweed Smith

"I was blessed with a green thumb, so why not use it," says Susie Wiebe with a laugh. Nine years ago she opened a nursery and garden center 6 miles north of Seminole.

"It all started with petunias. I really know how to grow petunias; and now we know how to grow potatoes and tomatoes. They do well, too. We have all sorts of stuff here: annuals, like your bedding plants that we sell at the greenhouse, anything flowery, then we have shrubs and trees also. We sell more hanging baskets than anything else. We give advice on gardening and sometimes help people with their landscaping."

Her place is called Blumenflor, a German word meaning an abundance of flowers. "But because we live in this environment of Spanish, German and English we just put everything together and we have blumenflor. So the flor is for those who speak Spanish (it means flower) and blumen is for the ones that speak German (it means flowers)."

Once a month she has a huge farmers market that draws customers from a large area. Vendors pay her 10% of what they sell. If they sell nothing they pay nothing.

"It's the third weekend every month from May to December. We start Friday night from 5 to 9, then on Saturday 10 'til 2. We have dozens of vendor spots inside the garden center building. They're all made from pallets. But it has spilled to the outside. We now have about 45 to 50 vendors. They are local people who sell fresh fruits and vegetables, eggs, baked goods, canned goods, peanuts, roasted pecans and handmade sewing items. But the baked good go first: rustic breads, cookies, cupcakes and sourdough items. They're gone in half an hour. We usually have some sort of a theme. Once we had a cowboy here with his horse and he gave rides to kids. In October we'll have Oktoberfest with a polka band and people wear traditional dress."

Among the popular items is a selection of jams and jellies.

"Apricot jam is number one because we have lots of apricot trees here. Things made from peaches and strawberries also do well. We have blackberries, too."

Her place is on eleven acres and the parking lot is way too small. Food trucks sell barbeque and burgers.

"There's one that sells crepes and waffles. Of course we try to have some traditional Mennonite things like rhubarb that comes from Canada, even from Germany and Ukraine. That's been hard but somehow we've figured it out and we have rhubarb growing so we can make rhubarb pie and stuff. We're a German-Mennonite community. I think visitors find that intriguing. Most of us here speak three languages: German, Spanish and English. We're multi cultural and we welcome everybody."
