STEVE NEVER FORGETS THE SECOND GRADE

Tumbleweed Smith

When Steve Dunbar of Dayton was in the second grade, the teacher had some unusual punishments. When he didn't finish a math test in the allotted time, he got popped with a paddle.

"I sat there in tears knowing I wouldn't finish the test in time and would end up getting pops," says Steve. "That was a terrifying experience. I kept it quiet and never talked about it for many many years."

Tumbleweed Smith

The teacher told Steve that she had talked to his mother and they both decided that the way he was going to learn math was to punish him when he didn't finish a test. "One time as an adult I was talking to my mother about the pops and she said the teacher never talked to her."

Kinfolks at family reunions noticed a change in Steve after the second grade. He used to be so outgoing, greeting his family members with hugs and smiles, and then all of a sudden he was withdrawn.

Steve spent five years in naval service, got some degrees and gradually opened up to people and became his old self. He teaches now in that same school building where he had a bad experience with the teacher. He passes his second grade room every school day but never goes inside it.

"I believe in punishment but not the way she would do it. One time in the second grade a friend and I were standing in line to go to the bathroom and we were horse playing. He teacher had taken us down there and then went back to her classroom. While we were playing, he slipped and fell down on that hard floor. It hurt and he started crying. Course it echoed in the hallway because it was quiet in that school back then. She heard that crying sound, came to get us and took us back to the room.

"She called both of us up to the front of the class, reached in her desk drawer and told us we'd better be glad she didn't have time to do the full thing, but she had time to do this. She put baby bibs around our neck, gave us a pacifier and a bottle and had us walk up and down the rows while she belittled us, calling us little babies and different things. Everybody was laughing except us and we were embarrassed. We were glad she didn't have much time, though. Otherwise she would have pinned a cloth diaper on us and made us suck on the pacifier and bottle as we walked up and down that aisle." For the longest, Steve didn't like to be in crowds, didn't like to go anywhere and felt like everybody was watching him, laughing at him, making fun of him.

"I worked at a funeral home for a few years and I was kinda forced into opening up and start talking to people. But it affected me for a long time. I wasn't very good at math and still haven't learned it. But I did great in my history courses and developed a great love for history."
