LJA builds Outdoor Visual Arts Classroom for Nora Davis

By Linda Cranford

The Laurel Junior Auxiliary 2015-2016 provisional class recently concluded their class project to build an Outdoor Visual Arts Classroom for students at Nora Davis Magnet School.

The outdoor classroom consists of 10 picnic tables with benches housed on the campus of Nora Davis between the gymnasium and 5th grade hallway. The picnic tables were painted to mirror various works of master artists such as Picasso, Kandinsky, Van Gogh, Mondrian, Georgia O'Keefe, Andy Warhol, Jasper Johns, Matisse, and others.

"Each grade level has a picnic table that they will use for their grade level activities," explained Nora Davis kindergarten teacher Emily Johnston, who is also a member of the provisional class. "Since we are art driven and art integrated, each grade level got to pick the artist that they wanted to replicate on their table. They did a study of that artist inside their regular classroom, and then took part in painting the top of their table. As they were painting, we also talked about the artist, their technique, and the way they painted their artwork. The children have loved it, and have had a great time. It's been a wonderful experience."

"There's nothing more important to us here than arts integration," said Dr. Sara Williams, Nora Davis Assistant Principal, "and, what better way than to build an outdoor classroom for the kids. We're very excited about this project, and are thankful to Junior Auxiliary."

"Through community sponsorships we were able to raise the money to purchase the picnic tables and necessary supplies," explained provisional class member Becky Collins. "The children painted the top of the table with their artist's theme, and we painted the bottom of the tables and the benches."

There are eight young women in the provisional class who are very active in the community. They include: Becky Collins, 28, Director of Community Relations and South Central Health Care Foundation at South Central Regional Medical Center; Wyth Collins, 31, Operations Manager for EMServ Ambulance Service in part with South Central Regional Medical Center; Kathryn Davis, 31, Director of Recruitment at Jones County Junior College and student recruitment team advisor, Bobcat Brigade; Jennifer Ishee, 30, Coordinator in Training for Aflac; Emily Johnston, 33, Kindergarten teacher at Nora Davis Magnet School; Jessica McKinnon, 31, owner of a Jack and Jill Children's Consignment Store; Jo Anna Newcomb, 44, Alumni Coordinator at Jones County Junior College; and, Haley Walley, 32, Loan Officer at First South Farm Credit.

Some things are just necessary

By Mitchell Williams

I was visiting an area high school a few days ago and soon saw a student with his head bowed toward the floor, as if something was wrong. As I approached the child, I remembered something my college coach Marshall Bell said to me one day. "Hacksaw," he said. "What you are going through, boy, is necessary. Son, it's necessary."

Like this student, I remember my head was also bowed toward the floor. And like my coach, he didn't know what was going on with me. But somehow Coach Bell knew that somehow I would be a better man because of it. Well, because of my own experience over 20 years ago, I approached this young man with just a few words like Coach Bell. And just said, "Believe it or not young man, what you are going through . . . is necessary. Just trust it."

Turns out this 16-year-old had a loved one who just received some tough news. "They're sick, and I can't do nothing," he said. No more words from me. Just a rub on the shoulder and some eye contact. After being with him for a few minutes, we got into the truck and drove to our next school with this young man on our mind. Probably like Coach Bell, we wondered if that little time with that young man actually helped.

The truth: There is no secret that tough times will come. But we believe those times are "allowed" to build us in some way. In fact, we agree with Coach Bell. They are "necessary." Without them, our character is never challenged. But bigger than that, our souls won't ever learn to trust Him. We believe that.

A note: I saw that young man in the last few hours. "Mr. Mitch! Mr. Mitch!" he yelled. "Can I tell you that the doctors say that my grandma will be fine. No hospital stay; she just needs to walk a little more. Isn't that awesome!" All, I could do was grin! A thought . . . If stuff is seemingly getting a little out of control around your house, and you're wondering why, maybe it's because something else that might be good is coming and you're not yet prepared for it. Maybe, it's "necessary." The good news is something else Coach Bell once said, "trouble don't last always, but learning always does. Always." He was right.

See you at a game soon.

LAUREL ART II STUDENTS PLACE IN ART CONTEST - Laurel High School's Art II students recently participated in a Black History Month art contest. The students used a variety of artistic techniques to create drawings of notable trailblazers. The drawings are currently on display at Laurel High School. Placing first was Orvante Newell with his drawing of Jackie Robinson, placing second was Akeyla Lindsey with his drawing of Dr. Ben Carson and placing third was Shania Evans with her drawing of First Lady Michelle Obama. Submitted

Stringer Alpaca Farm owner visits Kiwanis Club

By Linda Cranford

Mary Ann Stroka, owner of the A Stroka Gene-US Alpaca Farm, located in Stringer, visited with the members of the Laurel Kiwanis Club sharing with them the unique aspects of owning alpacas.

Mary Ann and her husband Terry moved to Mississippi from New York State in 2012, after one of their sons, who was stationed at Camp Shelby, fell in love with a young lady from Ellisville who was cooking catfish at Catfish One. After returning from Iraq, the two were married. When they had their first child, her oldest daughter and her husband with their two children came to visit, and they fell in love with Mississippi, too, and moved to Jones County. With three of their four children living in the South, (the older son Stroka brought several items for the members to see, which can be found in the Farm Store that are made from the fine alpaca fiber and imported from Peru including socks, insoles, hats, purses and stuffed animals.

Stroka said they offer school and private group tours at a cost of $5 per person, where children and adults can pet the alpacas, and learn how the fiber is processed.

For more information contact Stroka by calling 716-863-4366 or visit the website at www.astrokageneusalpacas.com.

lives in Florida), they decided to retire to Mississippi, to the farm in Jasper County, bringing with them 40 alpacas, two Great Pyrenees livestock guard dogs, two chickens, four cats, and four house dogs. Their daughter and her family lives nearby, and also helps out with the farm.

In the past four years, they've had several additions to the farm including two separate alpaca rescues, two llamas have been rescued, several roosters and hens, a pigeon that rehabilitated on the farm after a broken leg and now thinks it's a chicken, and a flock of guineas. Their daughter raises Angora goats and rabbits, and also has a pygmy goat. The most recent addition to the farm is a Scottish Highland Cow named Scottie who stands about 3-feet tall, with long brown and black hair. "Scottie is as tall as he will ever get," said Stroka. When asked the purpose of a cow that size, Stroka responded, "It's cute!" Stroka said the alpacas are a member of the camelid family and originate from Peru. The first alpacas were imported into the United States in 1993, and to keep from flooding the industry, the importation was ceased in 1998. Today, alpacas are raised throughout the United States.

She explained that they raise the alpacas for their fine fiber, and that they will live approximately 20 years. The alpacas are professionally sheared each year around the first of April. She then spins the fiber into yarn and makes different items that are sold in the Farm Store, such as crocheted hats, gloves, scarfs, shawls, etc. Most of the fiber is sent to a small fiber mill in New York for processing; however Stroka said she also processes the fiber from the animals herself. The store also includes various items that imported from Peru.

Using a spinning wheel, Stroka demonstrated how she spins the alpaca's fiber into yarn.

"The alpaca fiber is as soft as cashmere and ten times warmer than wool," explained Stroka. "It is also natural wicking which keeps your feet dry."
