Jones County Deputies receive Crisis Intervention certification

By Linda Cranford

One of the major issues facing law enforcement officers on a daily basis involves dealing with individuals who are suffering from some form of mental illness. In the past, Jones County Sheriff's Deputies have had no other alternative, but to take them into custody and incarcerate them in the county jail. Now, through the joint efforts of the Mississippi Department of Mental Health and the Mississippi Department of Public Safety an alternative is being established with the development of Crisis Intervention Teams across the state.

The Jones County Sheriff's Department is one of only a handful of law enforcement agencies in the State to take the first step in this jail diversion program.

Wednesday, October 28, Jones County Sheriff's Deputies J.D. Carter, Brennon Chancellor, Shannon Koss, and R.H. Stockman were the first in the department to receive their CIT certification after undergoing the intense 40 hour curriculum.

According to Brent Hurley with the Mississippi DMH, CITs are the product of a partnership between local law enforcement officers, and a variety of agencies, including Community Mental Health Centers, primary health providers and behavioral health professionals. Officers who have received crisis intervention training respond to individuals experiencing a mental health crisis and divert them to an appropriate setting to provide treatment; ensuring individuals are not arrested and taken to jail due to the symptoms of their illness.

"Mental crisis calls, and calls involving the mentally ill, can be the most dangerous calls we face on a daily basis," stated Jones County Sheriff Alex Hodge. This will not only benefit the family, but also benefit the officers and their safety. When this program is fully implemented, there will be a savings to the taxpayers of Jones County, but, more importantly, a true benefit for those suffering from mental illness. There will be a specific point of entry for those special cases where jail is not the appropriate environment."

All four deputies commented on how the CIT certification training was an "eye opening experience."

Stockman said the instructor asked them to list the names they use to describe people with mental illness. "But, no one said they were a dad, sister, son, or daughter," exclaimed Stockman. "They're people, just like us. We fight a war on drugs, every day. The guy selling dope gets up in the morning and says I'm going to sell dope, today. But, a guy who's paranoid, or schizophrenic, doesn't get up and say, I'm going to be paranoid, or schizophrenic, today. It's something he can't help, and that's where we fall in - we're here to help him."

"As soon as we got back, we started receiving calls that we immediately thought might be a mental crisis situation," said Chancellor. He said they receive calls on a daily basis of someone hearing voices. "With this training, we're able to recognize (the possibility of a call being a mental crisis situation) and help our fellow officers and the people to get the help they need." "People actually believe they hear voices, and to them it's real," added Stockman. "You don't ever tell them that they don't hear it, because, they hear it, just like you're hearing me right now. We try to encourage and deescalate the situation."

Hurley added, "Through State stature, as a certified CIT officer, they have the authority to judge rather or not a person is in a mental health crisis, and have the authority to take them into custody without charging them with a misdemeanor crime. Eighty-seven percent of the time, officers, who have received this training, deescalate the situation on the scene, or get the person to a mental health crisis team and don't have to take them into custody at all."

Hurley said that Jones County is only one of four agencies in the State thus far to participate in the program. The other three agencies include South Haven Police Department, Moss Point Police Department, and Gulfport Police Department.

Giant Pumpkin from Maine finds home in Jones County

By Linda Cranford

In the front yard of a home in the Errata community of Jones County now sits a giant 876 pound pumpkin which was grown in the state of Maine.

During the first week in October, while vacationing in Maine, David and Billie Mapp attended the Damariscotta Pumpkinfest where giant pumpkins weighing as much as two thousand pounds were on display. The Mapps have attended the festival often, and enjoy seeing the giant pumpkins. This year, David talked one of the owners into letting him have one of the pumpkins. Two weeks after returning to Mississippi from their vacation, David drove back to Maine in his pickup to bring home the giant pumpkin.

"When David left that morning, I talked to the owner, and he said, 'there's frost on the pumpkins and snow in the mountains,'" said Billie.

"When I got there, he offered me a twelve hundred pound pumpkin, but it wouldn't fit in the back of the truck," exclaimed

David. He said he made a monetary contribution to the Pumpkinfest, and agreed to send the owner some of the seeds.

"Damariscotta is about the size of Ellisville, and is located on the bay of the Damariscotta River," said Billie. She said that besides giant pumpkins, they also grow oysters in the little town. During the festival, races are held in giant pumpkin boats, and painted pumpkins are found throughout the town.

"Every business has a pumpkin, painted by a local artist, sitting at their business entrance," said David. He said during the festival, the giant pumpkins are made into race boats with outboard motors, and races are held on the bay of the Damariscotta River that surrounds the town. "They mount Styrofoam around them to make boats out of them." They said other pumpkins are artistically painted, and turned into paddle boats.

David's love for giant pumpkins started several years ago when they were vacationing in Nova Scotia. "We saw a sign that said Pumpkin Weigh-in," described Billie. "So, we turned down the road and there were these huge pumpkins being weighed in. Ever since then, David's been interested in big pumpkins."

David said that over the years he has gotten seeds from giant pumpkins and tried to grow them here in Mississippi. "It's just too hot down here," said David. "I grew one that weighed about a hundred pounds one year, but I haven't had much luck in growing them here."

According to David they will be able to enjoy the giant pumpkin for another two to three weeks before it begins to decompose.

LITTLE GREGORY is a live wire who scurries all around the ARL lobby and office, playing with brother Edgar and Rambo the Maine Coon! Gregory can climb the cat condos with stealth and precision and prances around very proud of himself when he reaches the top. Gregory is also a social little fella; he starts to purr when anyone approaches his condo, even before the visitor opens his door. Won't you come meet Gregory and his pals? Gregory would like nothing more than to show you his talents!

"Their smiles always brighten my day," says Matthew Ducksworth, father of two from Taylorsville.

Along with being a father to two girls, Aaliyah and Alyssa, Matthew is a logger by trade and served in the National Guard for the past 15 years. During his time in the military, Matthew has been on two deployments to the Middle East. He spent a year and nine months abroad, however, Matthew says none of that prepared him for raising two girls.

"I have never experienced anything like the birth of my children. That excitement and joy is something that will stay with me for the rest of my life," says Matthew. "My wife, Mathia, and I were both born at South Central Regional Medical Center, so it was the natural choice for us to have our children there."

Mathia Ducksworth received obstetrical care from Rebecca Roberts, D.O., Obstetrician and Gynecologist at the OB-GYN Group of Laurel. "Anytime my wife needed help, Dr. Roberts and staff were there," said Matthew. "She was very helpful and informative, but most of all she was like a friend to my wife. I thought that was very nice of her."

After the arrival of Alyssa, the Ducksworth's youngest daughter, Matthew recalls the announcement to family and friends. "As soon as Alyssa was born, I followed her and her nurses to the nursery at South Central Regional Medical Center. While the staff weighed and measured her, Aaliyah and I were able to push the button that plays 'Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star' to announce the arrival of our new little girl. It plays throughout the medical center, so it was nice that everyone in the building knew of our new blessing."

There's no place like home.
