ROUGH RIDIN' IN THE PALO DURO

Tumbleweed Smith

There is a sign near the entrance to the Palo Duro State Park just outside of Canyon that reads: JEEP TOURS. I highly recommend it. Case Barfield will take you on a ride that scares you and makes you happy when it's over. That's when you feel like you've been on a wonderful carnival thrill ride. Who needs Six Flags when you have Case behind the wheel of a powerful Humvee, one that can climb nearly straight up?

Tumbleweed Smith Case is big, bearded, loud and knows how to treat his customers. "There's no way you can ignore me. I give people no choice but to talk to me. You cannot come out here and be bored. My customers pay to have fun and we're gonna have some fun."

He grew up near the canyon (the second largest canyon in the country) and has explored it all his life. "We'd ride bikes up and down the canyon. There used to be a place called Devil's Slide and we'd slide down that thing just in our basketball shorts. I think they've blocked it off now. It was known to cut up a lot of kids' legs. We'd camp out in the canyon and go all over it."

He started taking people into the canyon six years ago after a career as a construction welder. It was difficult laying out a route to go up and down the steep canyon walls. He followed game trails with a bulldozer.

It is one rough ride. The Humvee is nineteen inches high so he can straddle a rock sticking up a foot and a half. Eight people ride in the back of the Humvee on bench seats. A special needs person can ride in the passenger seat. He'll stop occasionally to give a commentary at places like the Yellow Bear Bluff, a sacred spot for the Comanches. Getting to it is dangerous and you have to watch your footing. "You've got to have a little testicular fortitude to ride with me but in over 6,000 jeep tours I've only had two end early because the passengers couldn't take it."

He'll also take you to the bottom of the canyon where you see lush grass, tall trees and a stream. "If you take an hour jeep tour you'll see what you could see in a hike at the state park in a day. If you take a two-hour tour I'm gonna try to show you what you can see in a week."

He budgets twelve thousand dollars a year for tires. A set will last just two to three months on the rough paths he has created. He is complimented when someone calls them roads. He does his own maintenance on the retired military Humvees he gets at auctions. "We have infinite confidence in them. We know their capabilities."

He takes people hunting. "We do hunts in the wintertime for mule deer and aoudad sheep. We do pig hunting at night." He takes only seven days off during the year. Some days are quite full. "This morning we started at four getting ready for a sunrise wedding. Then I had a three-hour tour, a couple of one-hour tours, a two-hour and this three-hour tour. My wife schedules the rides and other activities. She works me pretty hard."
