DEWEY AND AJA YOUNG HAVE A LOT TO BE THANKFUL FOR

Tumbleweed Smith

Tumbleweed Smith A little over twenty years ago Dewey Young was a supervisor for some McDonald's restaurants in Kerrville. The manager of one of them was a girl named Aja (pronounced Asia). They were attracted to each other, dated and got married. "She saw me and just couldn't resist," says Dewey. Aja says it was the other way around. For her, marriage to Dewey was a big leap because he had four young children from a previous marriage. "Everybody I talked to thought I was crazy," says Aja. "He's older than I am." They've been married nineteen years. "She told me she loved my kids and would like to have some of her own. They produced four daughters, bringing the total number of children to eight.

Dewey had a jewelry repair business in Dallas for twenty years. He grew up in the jewelry business in Brady. They thought it best to raise the eight youngsters in Brady so they moved into a rent house Dewey owned. One afternoon there was an electrical fire and the house burned. "We lost everything but we didn't lose any of us," says Dewey. "We're lucky the fire happened while nobody was home."

The residents of Brady were responsive to the needs of the family. "Every time I looked up someone was bringing food or clothing, furniture, just all kinds of things we needed," says Aja. Heather Miles, who owns a hotel in Brady, gave them free rooms for sixty days and took the family to Disneyland.

Soon after the fire Dewey was in his truck with his daughters and they were in tears. Dewey told them not to cry. "I told them to think of the positive things, that they were going to get new clothes and toys, a new bed. They quit crying and my little seven year old said 'dad, I don't have to clean my bedroom.'"

The fire was in March of this year. In June, Dewey was in a terrible car wreck. "A sixteen year old girl was coming in the opposite direction and pulled right out in front of me and I swerved to avoid a head-on but she knocked me into a truck that was coming on to the highway."

When Aja got the call that her husband and two daughters and one of their best friends had been in a wreck she immediately went to the accident scene near Comanche. "My thoughts were just a jumble. I couldn't image all this happening within a three-month period. I wasn't going to ask what's next because I was afraid some other horrible thing would happen." They were blessed again because they all walked away from the accident.

Again the people of Brady poured out their hearts. Dewey had grown up there and people knew his family, but Aja was new. She was from out of town and rode racehorses. But the people of Brady accepted her like they had known her all her life. She proudly calls Brady home. Both Dewey and Aja came from families that had five children.
