When to bring in a professional organizer

Skilled professional organizers have a unique talent and the expertise to create solutions for cluttered spaces and other overcrowded areas in a home. Although some may view hiring a professional to help them sort through their stuff as a luxury, in many instances relying on an organizer can be money well spent. That's because a pro is specially equipped to set up areas that function smoothly and efficiently, which increases the chances spaces will remain organized after the initial job is done. The following are some reasons why a professional organizer might be warranted.

- Difficulty finding time: Procrastination is a major component behind why people do not get ahead of clutter. It's easy to shrug off the job in favor of other tasks. Hiring an organizer is handing the job off to someone whose job it is to find the time to tidy up.
- Feeling overwhelmed: Many people admit that the idea of tackling organizational jobs puts them in a tailspin. Individuals who feel that organization has gotten away from them to the point that the job seems impossible can benefit from hiring an organizer. In addition, those who have been diagnosed with a hoarding disorder and are ill at ease at the idea of getting rid of items likely will find a professional organizer can be a saving grace.
- Moving into a new space: New homeowners, renters or office workers moving into new spaces may want to start out on more organized footing. A professional organizer can help to lay a more tidy foundation.
- Never achieved organizing goals: Many people try to get their spaces in order, but fall flat time and again. For those whose spaces have never quite been organized the way they have wanted, a professional organizer can provide the tips and tricks that work. He or she will not do the work without you, but will guide you through the process.
- One space is problematic: Some people master organizing but still have one room or area they cannot conquer. This could be a garage or another space that tends to be the catch-all for other rooms. The right pro can help tame even the most out-of-control area.

Professional organizers can assist with various tasks and provide the extra motivation needed to tame clutter.

Neva's Album

Part 2

This candid snapshot of Neva's daughter, Beverly Leigh, was taken during the wedding reception at her house. We don't get a full view of Beverly's dress, but we do get to see a lovely smile. Contrasted with a common feature of present day weddings, among the several dozen photos of this reception, there is not a folding chair in sight. Judging by other photos from this event, Beverly is sitting in what appears to be an oak rocking chair. Other photos show a number of other chairs that were brought outdoors, including several that were semi-upholstered.

In the background, one can make out the white painted posts where guard rails are now to prevent cars from running off the road into Proctor Brook as it crosses under Ridge Road just west of Childs. Unfortunately, Neva did not identify the little girl behind Beverly.

Like Beverly, Bessie Corigan wore a double strand of pearls. A low, wide collar covered her shoulders. Her dress was long, touching the floor, yet not so long as to be considered as having a train. The front of the skirt was partly gathered into a bow around knee level. Other photos from this wedding show she had fingerless gloves. Overall, it was a traditional dress with a few modern touches; the lack of a train suggests perhaps a certain level of practicality on the bride's part. She was married to Thomas Corigan at the old Congregationalist Church in Gaines before it burned in 1950.

Why it pays to work with a real estate agent

Equity, pre-approval, parties, known as dual contingencies, appraisal agency. Typically this does not occur in the same transaction, as that can create a conflict of interest. home buyers may not understand them. Commissions typically fall between 5 and 6 percent on real estate transactions, an amount that is split by all real estate professionals working on the transaction.

Why work with a real estate professional? Homeowners may wonder why they should seek the services of a real estate agent, broker or Realtor®. That's particularly so for sellers, as buyers typically do not pay a real estate representative any money.

Types of real estate professionals

Many people use the terms real estate agent, real estate broker and Realtor® interchangeably. While these professionals handle many similar tasks, there are some notable distinctions between them. A Realtor® is a registered term used to describe a real estate professional who is a member of the National Association of Realtors®. These individuals must adhere to a strict code of ethics, and have access to market data and transaction management services unique to this specific trade organization. A real estate agent is licensed to help people buy and sell real estate, and is paid a commission when a deal is completed. A real estate broker does the same jobs as an agent, but is also licensed to work independently and may employ his or her own agents. The broker also may get a percentage of the commission from agents in addition to his or her own commissions, according to Investopedia.

Expertise: Considering that buying and selling a home is one of the biggest financial transactions one will make, it makes sense to leave it in the hands of experienced professionals. Price a home right: Real estate professionals will conduct a market analysis and look at "comps" in the area to determine a price that is fair and will help a house move. When working with buyers, the agent or broker also will be able to help them come up with a reasonable offer price.

Access to MLS: Agents and brokers have access to the Multiple Listing Service, which is widely used across the United States for listing available properties. It helps sellers sell faster and will enable buyers to view multiple properties all in one database. Negotiations: Leaving negotiations to a third party removes emotion from the transaction and can help everyone involved resolve issues and agree on acceptable terms. Buying and selling real estate is a complex process. Real estate professionals can simplify the process and make it more enjoyable for buyers and sellers alike.

Buyer and seller A professional may represent either the buyer or seller or both. A buyer's agent is negotiating for the buyer in the transaction, while a seller's agent negotiates for the seller. Real estate professionals also can represent both

How to handle selling a home when moving into an assisted living facility

Families must make a number of important decisions when an aging relative decides the time is right to move into an assisted living facility. Such facilities help older individuals who are having troubling living independently. In addition to finding the right facility for a loved one, many families have to decide what to do with their aging loved one's home.

Aging individuals with companions such as a spouse or a live-in partner may not need to sell their house if that person will not be moving to the assisted living facility with them. However, many partners choose to move as well, and family members may need to sell their current home in order to pay for their loved one to stay at an assisted living facility. The senior care experts at Caring.com note that selling a home when a loved one decides to move into an assisted living facility can present some emotional aspects that will not necessarily be present when selling one's own home. In recognition of that and some additional difficulties associated with this unique situation, Caring.com offers the following tips to help families navigate the process as smoothly as possible.

- Consider assigning someone power of attorney. Individuals move into assisted living facilities for a number of reasons, so not everyone will do so because of diminishing cognitive abilities. However, Caring.com notes that selling the home of a loved one diagnosed with dementia can present unique challenges, as only a homeowner can transfer a home to a new owner. In such instances, someone may need to step in and assume power of attorney. Contact an elder law attorney to facilitate that process, if necessary. Such professionals also can provide insight into laws that can help families determine if it's best to sell the home or hold onto it if proceeds from a potential sale are not needed to pay for a facility. Arrange for power of attorney or even a guardianship prior to putting a home on the market.

- Discuss the situation and the sale. Aging individuals should be given ample time to process the idea of selling their homes before moving into an assisted living facility. Homeowners make untold sacrifices to buy and maintain their homes, so the decision to sell could elicit a range of emotions that aging individuals have a right to process before a "For Sale" sign is erected in the front yard. Caring.com recommends maintaining an open and honest dialogue about what can be achieved by selling the home and how their quality of life will benefit from moving to the assisted living facility.

- Sort through belongings. Caring.com notes the significance of allowing aging relatives to take special items with them into the assisted living facility. It will be impossible to take a lifetime's worth of possessions into such a facility, but sort through belongings with your aging family member and do everything possible to ensure that especially meaningful items can make the move. Remaining items can be donated, sold, given to younger loved ones, or discarded.

- Make sure all relevant parties remain in the loop. If one person accepts power of attorney or a similar level of responsibility, that person should ensure all interested parties remain in the loop about the sale process. Aging adults without diminished mental faculties should be routinely updated on the sale process. Keeping all interested parties in the loop reduces the risk of objections or other problems when the sale is set to go through.

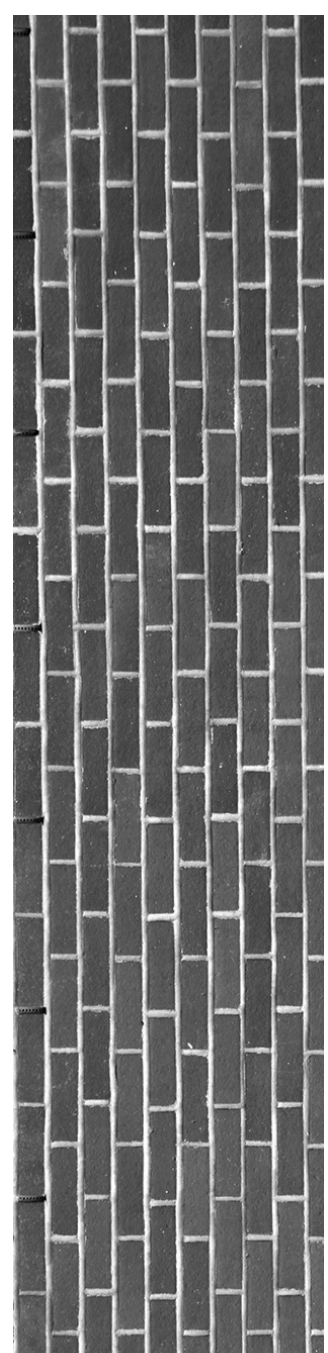

Selling a home before moving into an assisted living facility presents some unique challenges that families can tackle together to ensure the process goes smoothly.

Obituaries

Anne Albone was born on January 19th in the year 1942 in upstate New York to Leroy Gaze and Harriett Bigford-Gaze (Gillan) in the quaint small town of Medina. She passed away peacefully at the age of 81 on Wednesday, January 3, 2024, in her Jacksonville, Florida memory care facility. As a young woman she obtained a cosmetology license, relying on this to earn a living throughout most of her working life, supplementing her income by occasionally taking in elderly people to care for them and working as a cocktail waitress. She seemed to find her calling toward the end of her working life when she became a certified nurse's aide, but no longer needed to work after about age 45. Anne learned to become an amazing cook from her Grandma Bigford. She was extraordinarily outgoing and never knew a stranger. She was crafty and spent her personal time sewing, singing and playing the guitar. In later years she honed her skills as a creative writer and was an avid quilter. She loved the creativity of quilting and prior to memory care, she belonged to a community quilt club. She was a fighter, overcoming many challenges. You wouldn't dare tell her she couldn't do something. Anne married five times and had two children in her first marriage, son Daniel Paul Albone and daughter Linda Kay Albone (Brett). Both her first and final marriage was to David Albone. Between those marriages she mostly lived around Daytona Beach, Florida, where their first born, 11-year-old "Danny", was killed by a train on the fourth of July in 1974. During her remarriage to Dave Albone after his retirement from a career in the Air Force, they enjoyed flipping a few homes, camping trips, and volunteering with the Red Cross. Together they raised his son Anthony "Tony" Albone who married Marci Pitcher, later adding years of enjoyment with their three children - Ashlee, Leah and Abby. After her husband's passing and with the onset of dementia, her final years brought her to a small memory care facility with giving and amazing people who loved her. The final goodbyes of her roommate and staff were both beautiful and heartbreaking, proving that people in these environments can become significant "family" members. Anne is predeceased by her husband Dave Albone, her son Danny Albone, her parents Leroy Gaze and Harriett Gillan, and her stepson Tony Albone. She is survived by her sister, Susan M. Gaze of New Smyrna, Florida, her stepson Tony's wife Marci and their children Ashlee, Leah and Abby, as well as a community of lineage in upper Western New York, a place that has always been "home" to her and where her remains will rest into perpetuity. If you are one who is compelled to give at a time like this, I urge you to support your local hospice organization or efforts to advance Alzheimer's research. Take purposeful care of yourself and treasure your beautiful and miraculous body, letting it serve you well into the future. To share a special memory of Anne, please visit: www.mitchellfamilyfuneralhomes.com Anne's arrangements have been entrusted to the Bates, Wallace & Heath Funeral Home of Middleport. Many blessings to you all.
