Health Habits: I learned them from my Dad

By Meri Raffetto, RDN

As a mother of five-year old triplets I'm starting to see exactly how children learn healthy habits. It doesn't always come from talking at them or trying to explain by reading child friendly stories or using carrot shaped puppets to get the message out about developing healthy habits. They learn from observing our behavior.

Our generation seems a bit different than our parents' in that we make life busier than it needs to be, pushing out time for exercise, relaxation and eating properly. A recent study published July 21 in the American Journal of Men's Health tracked 10,000 men from adolescence to adulthood and found that men are gaining weight after becoming first time fathers while non fathers are losing weight in the same time frame.

Whether the weight gain is coming from a decrease in time to exercise, eating off your kids' plate or living a stress filled existence, the thing is... your kids are watching your actions and it's making an impact on their own choices. As the old saying goes, "actions speak louder than words." Instead of just focusing on telling children how to eat or stay active I believe it's time to look inward and see if we're setting our kids up for success. What do they witness on a daily basis from our own actions? What did we learn from our parent's actions?

The above questions made me reflect on my own childhood and the lessons that I learned from simply observing my dad and I'm happy to report they were some good ones.

He never used the term exercise; he just enjoyed certain activities. My dad was always active. He was an avid outdoorsman who loved any type of fishing whether it was lake, river, ocean fishing or even ice fishing... he did it all. He also was known to golf and play handball. Some of these activities are slow moving but the point is I always witnessed him enjoying being active. What I took from this was that movement can simply be enjoyable and not a chore we have to do to stay healthy.

He didn't label foods healthy; he just enjoyed and ate them. We didn't hear the message that we needed to eat vegetables or the opposite, that vegetables aren't tasty. We watched my dad eat vegetables and thoroughly enjoy them. Every single night of my childhood whether we had spaghetti, hamburgers or pizza we always had a salad with oil and vinegar dressing. Most often that salad was accompanied by an additional vegetable serving. My dad simply enjoyed his vegetables and needless to say it rubbed off on us kids. All four of his children enjoy vegetables and it seems very normal to us to have several servings with our dinner.

He didn't speak of stress management; he simply took a morning walk and observed nature. We lived near a large wooded lot growing up and my dad typically got up early and stood in front of the sliding glass door with his cup of coffee and observed the various wildlife that congregated in the back yard. He was very peaceful and still. It seemed almost meditative and you felt the need to quietly tip toe past him so you didn't disturb this peaceful interlude.

Nearly every day he took his dog for a morning walk in the wooded lot. When I'd join him we didn't do a lot of chit chatting. Just walking and taking in the cool crisp morning and the smell of the pine needles crunching beneath our feet. There is a great gift of stress management I received in learning how to be still and quiet, especially in the non-stop loud world we live in today.

Dads, you have a great opportunity to teach your kids by your actions. It doesn't have to be monumental. It's the simple things they'll learn like eating veggies each day, taking a walk or enjoying a fun physically active game. Your actions are what they'll remember the most and adopt into their own lives.

Where the presidency is headed

By Lee H. Hamilton

Before the ins and outs of the 2016 presidential contest become a preoccupation for many of us, it seems a good time to step back and look at the office of the presidency for which so many candidates are vying. The presidency inherited by whoever wins next November will be substantially changed from the position his or her predecessors occupied a few decades ago.

The President is now the chief—and sometimes the sole actor—in American government. He far outweighs the other so-called “co-equal” branches. The media covers the White House extensively, and the other branches much less so. People don’t expect Congress or the Supreme Court to solve the country’s problems.

Instead, they look to the president for initiatives, for remedies—and increasingly and sadly to serve as a de facto pastor to the nation when we confront a tragedy.

The branch that came first in our founders’ minds, Congress, is now of secondary importance. This has been a long, slow development, the result not so much of court cases, legislation, or even deliberate planning, but of countless decisions by congressional leaders that have handed power to the president so as to avoid tough decisions on Capitol Hill. There may be limitations imposed by the courts or public opinion, but the system of checks and balances that our system was supposed to operate under has been severely weakened.

Not even the press can hold the president to account any more, except under extraordinary circumstances. For one thing, it’s very hard to grill the president these days. The tradition of regular presidential news conferences has all but disappeared—and when the press corps does get a chance to ask questions, the White House carefully manages the event.

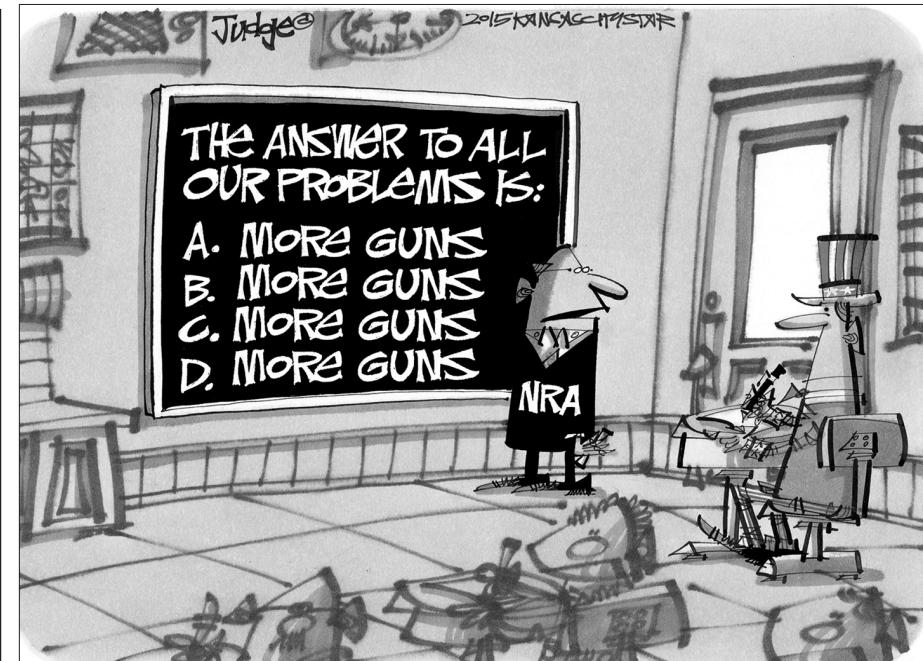

This makes it very hard to find a forum or a place where people outside the White House bubble, can ask the president probing questions and press for thorough explanations of a policy or problem. I’ve long favored a regular question-and-answer period in Congress that would be publicly televised—a chance for the president’s supporters and opponents to probe his or her thinking. At a minimum, we should get regular and extensive press conferences. Instead, the only media-related event that happens regularly is the morning meeting among White House staff to figure out how to get the president on the evening news in the most favorable light. It’s a form of manipulation that greatly reduces accountability.

Which is a shame not just for the obvious reasons, but also because the federal government cries out for more accountability these days. Whoever is president next, he or she would do well to pay more attention to effective management of the vast executive establishment than has been the practice until now. Otherwise, the breakdowns in the operation of government to which we’ve grown accustomed will continue.

Every president comes into office insisting he’ll spend a lot of time on making the government work better, but is invariably distracted by the rush of events. This is not entirely the president’s fault. The Congressional Research Service estimates that 1,200 to 1,400 positions are subject to confirmation by the Senate, and presidents often have a hard time getting the people they want into position. That needs to change, perhaps by requiring an up-or-down vote on a nominee within 90 days.

To sum it up, while the president’s accumulation of power is a serious problem in the big picture, it nonetheless is a fact. We ought to make it easier for him to get the people he needs in a position to make government work more effectively.

Renters' Tax Credit Deadline Approaching

September 1 deadline is less than one month away

Baltimore—Qualified renters in Maryland are running out of time to take advantage of available tax credits, just as their home owning counterparts do. The Renter's Tax Credit program gives qualified renters in Maryland the potential to receive a credit up to $750.

The program is designed to help renters whose monthly rent exceeds a fixed amount in relation to their income. If they qualify, they may be able to receive a credit up to, but not exceeding, $750. Not every Marylander who rents their home can take advantage of the credit. In order to qualify for the program, renters must meet specific eligibility requirements: Be legally responsible for the rent; Be age 60 or over, or 100 percent disabled; Be a surviving spouse of one who otherwise would have been eligible; or, if a resident is under age 60, they must have had at least one dependent under the age of 18 living with them, and didn't receive fed eral or state housing subsidies or reside in public housing, and the combined income of all residents of the home is below the allowable guidelines during the year they apply for the credit.

The deadline to apply for the credit is September 1 of the year in which the credit will apply. Although, waiting until the last minute is never recommended. “We always encourage residents to file as early as possible to avoid any last minute filing backlog,” says Agency Director Sean Powell.

Applications are available at local libraries, senior centers and social security offices, as well as online, via email, or by calling the Tax Credits Telephone Service at 410-767-4433 (in Baltimore) or toll-free 1-800-944-7403.

For all of calendar year 2014, the agency received more than 11,000 applications, issuing nearly 8,000 credits, for a total of $2.4 million in tax credits for Marylanders who rent their homes.

For more information and specific guidelines about qualifications for the Renter's Tax Credit, visit the agency's website or call the Tax Credits Telephone Service at 410-767-4433 (in Baltimore) or toll-free 1-800-944-7403.

Black lives should matter to black killers, too

By Lekan Ogunttoyinbo
NNPA Columnist

I applaud the Black Lives Matter Movement for renewing attention on police violence against blacks, an issue that is old as the republic—for black lives do matter. And black lives should always matter—even when the killers are not hyper-aggressive cops, white supremacists or other emblems of oppression.

In 2011, the most recent year for which data was available, more than 6,000 blacks were murdered, according to the FBI, most often by other blacks. The U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics estimates that more than 90 percent of blacks are killed by blacks. Around the world, hundreds of thousands of blacks die at the hands of other blacks as a result of warfare, ethnic and religious conflict and police and military brutality.

In fact, many crimes committed by cops against blacks pale in comparison to black-on-black crimes.

Tuesday night in St. Louis, for example, two males were killed in separate shootings and eight others were shot and wounded in six shootings.

A few weeks ago in a Detroit neighborhood, patrolling police officers spotted two men in a car. One of them appeared to have a gun. When the cops tried to pull them over, they sped off and a chase ensued. The driver of the fleeing car nosed his car onto the sidewalk and ran over a six-year-old child, killing him instantly. He didn't stop. He ran over laid them on the sidewalk in full view of passing motorists and shot them dead in broad daylight.

The conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo has resulted in the deaths of more people than any other conflict since World War II. To date, more than five million people have been killed. The conflict also has drawn in several neighboring countries. Some analysts have called the Congo crisis the down their homes and businesses. Black South Africans see the black expats as an economic threat. And the list goes on and on.

For the record, I am sickened by stories of police brutality against blacks, by the footage of the killings of Walter Scott and Samuel Dubose and by the gross insensitivity of the Ferguson police who left Michael Brown's lifeless body baking on asphalt for four hours. But I am even more horrified by what blacks do to each other in this country and around the world. Pushing the idea that black lives matter has to involve more than slogans, hash tags and protest rallies. And it must be more complex than urging federal officials to investigate police misconduct.

We have to place a higher value on black lives in our own communities, block-by-block, city-by-city and nation-by-nation. It's hard to persuade white authorities to respect our human rights and treat us with dignity when many of us don't do the same. Until we get just as fired up about black-on-black violence in North St. Louis, in Detroit, on Chicago's South Side, in South Central Los Angeles, in Lagos, in Kinshasa, in Kingston, in Port Au Prince and in the favelas of Rio de Janeiro as we do about cop killings, the phrase "Black Lives Matter" will remain no more than a pithy slogan and the killings of blacks will continue unabated.

another child, a three-year-old who died within a few hours, before he was apprehended.

A few years ago, Al-Jazeera posted footage online of military personnel in Nigeria, the world's largest black country, murdering young men on a busy street of a large northern Nigerian city. The men were suspected of being affiliated with the terrorist group, Boko Haram. The soldiers had conducted a house-to-house search in a neighborhood believed to be sympathetic to the group. They pulled young men who fit particular profiles out of their homes, closest thing to a world war in more than 70 years.

In Nigeria, large numbers of people are abducted each year and used as human sacrifices. Children are particularly vulnerable to these predators. In parts of Tanzania, kidnappers frequently target albinos for ritual sacrifices. The belief is that the gods give you greater rewards if you present them with an albino.

On at least two occasions in the last five years, large numbers of blacks in South Africa have viciously attacked expatriate blacks from other African countries, killing scores and burning

New Film in a ‘Search for Black Wealth’

By Stacy M. Brown

Even though screenings for the film were sold out long ago, interest in “Generation One: The Search for Black Wealth,” generated the type of buzz usually reserved for an anticipated, high-budget blockbuster. Crowds flocked to showings last month in Atlanta, Washington and Chicago.

“It’s our fifth documentary now and we felt like the next step in the progression is wealth, or more specifically, the lack of wealth in the black community and the time to release this is perfect,” said Lamar Tyler, one half of the filmmaking duo of Lamar and Ronnie Tyler.

The power couple, whom Ebony Magazine named as one of its coolest black families in America, are the creators of “Black and Married with Kids,” the largest independent African-American marriage and parenting website that boasts about 500,000 Facebook fans.

The new film presents compelling advice about the who, what and why of building financial wealth, according to the Tylers.

“We spend a trillion dollars a year and most of it goes outside of our community,” said Lamar Tyler, a former Prince George’s County resident. “We have to start supporting our own business and make sure we invest in our own community to ensure that our dollars recycle.”

The film, reviewed favorably by Black Enterprise Magazine, boldly lays out how the gaping disparity between black and white wealth came to be and then speaks to some of the black community’s most provocative, innovative problem solvers and financial experts for solutions. The result is not just a compelling discussion of the issues but an irresistible call to action and resolution—one with the potential to resonate for generations.

“With the 2007 recession, the housing crisis and soaring unemployment rates leaving black America’s wallet trapped in the crosshairs of the United States’ financial crisis, the lack of generational wealth in the African-American community has never been in sharper focus,” Tyler said.

The movie takes a hard look at the numbers, giving historical context to early wealth creation in the black community and taps the expertise of the nation’s top financial experts to weigh in not only on how blacks fell behind, but offers surefire strategies families can implement to begin building a strong financial legacy for generations to come, according to Tyler.

“What I found from working on the project and with different experts and talking to people in the community, is that there are a lot of issues with wealth and the problem really is an education problem,” Tyler said. “So many people watching the film told us that they didn’t know a lot of what was presented. The reason they didn’t know is that most of the time, blacks don’t have access to the information.”

Already, “Generation One” has sold out theaters in three major cities and Tyler says he’ll soon add more locations. There have been more than 123,000 likes on Facebook and 89,000 shares for the film.

“It’s important. The film is important because some of the things can be traced to mainstream culture. There is a self-centered message that’s repeatedly built into our heads,” Tyler said. “But, it’s important to know that wealth creation isn’t for you, it’s for your children, and their children, and their children. This film looks at historical reasons for why things are the way they currently stand, including that during the Great Depression, a lot of Americans had their mortgage loans forgiven but they still allowed blacks to go into foreclosure and lose their homes.”

The film is available on DVD. For more information, visit www.generation1movie.com.

For Ravens linebacker Courtney Upshaw, it's all about the team

By Turron Davenport

The Baltimore Ravens used a second round pick to select linebacker Courtney Upshaw in the 2012 NFL Draft. Upshaw came to the Ravens after being named a first team All-American at Alabama. He put up outstanding numbers in college. Things changed once he got to the NFL. Upshaw became a player whose contribution didn't show in the box score but he earned the utmost respect from his teammates. He put the team first. That's what he describes as "the Raven way."

Upshaw has become a run stuffing outside linebacker for the Ravens. He has to give up a large amount of pass rushing opportunities to Elvis Dumervil but has not complained at all. Getting involved in the physical aspect of the game is something that Upshaw relishes.

"I love it—being able to go in and battle tight ends and do stuff like that. I was never a cover guy in college," Upshaw said. "Being here and being able to drop in coverage—I haven't gotten an interception or anything like that—but it's fun for me."

This year marks the final year of a four-year contract worth $5,296,698 that Upshaw signed in 2012. Many players set personal goals for themselves, especially in a contract year. That's not the case for Upshaw.

"I want to just go out and produce and do more. I can sit here and say, 'Oh, I set this goal for myself,'" Upshaw said. "Honestly, I just want to get that first sack, and then I'll get to clicking from there. But right now, it's all about just doing more—doing more year one, year two to [year] three. I just want to do more to help this team win."

The goal for Upshaw was to focus on increasing his opportunities to rush the passer. Upshaw would like to get more sacks, something that he hasn't been able to do much during his career. He only has three career sacks in three seasons. Upshaw didn't register a sack during the regular season last year but did get a sack against the Pittsburgh Steelers in the divisional playoff round.

The biggest play of Upshaw's career didn't come on a sack however. The Ravens reached the Super Bowl in Upshaw's rookie season. Upshaw had a key play when he forced running back Lamichael James to fumble the ball during the Ravens victory over the San Francisco 49ers.

Upshaw wants to continue to be a force against the run and be a reliable option to cover tight ends. As he said, "I'm just trying to better myself as a whole." Improving in all aspects of the game will allow Upshaw to be a contributor to the team.

The expectations for Upshaw have always been there. He initially was a straight-line pass rusher but has evolved into an outside linebacker who can play on almost any down. The primary job that Upshaw has now is a selfless one. He has to aggressively set the edge against the run, funneling runners back into the teeth of the defense.

The Ravens pride themselves on stopping the run. They want to control the line of scrimmage. A player like Upshaw helps them do so. The organization will face a decision at the end of the season. Upshaw is a team first player, but he wants to make it an easy decision for the team when it comes to whether or not he is signed to a long term contract.

Seven painting projects for weekend warriors

(Family Features) — Homeowners are often advised to keep the home neutral and avoid decorating with anything too bold or personal. But in order to make a house your home, the decor should reflect your personality and style. The good news is you don't have to make permanent commitments. Paint is an easy and cost-effective way to infuse color and patterns that transform the aesthetic of a room or piece of furniture.

Regardless of whether you're a masterful weekend warrior or first-time do-it-yourselfer, paint projects don't have to be time-intensive or overwhelming—a little paint and creativity can go a long way toward refreshing your space.

"The key to achieving professional-looking results is using the right tools," said interior decorator Martin Amado. "That's why I start all my painting projects by going to Lowe's to pick up high-quality paint brushes, a can of paint and 3M Safe Release Painter's Tape with Advanced Edge-Lock Paint Line Protector."

Amado suggests these painting projects you can accomplish with just one can of paint:

1. Color block your furniture. Take the dining room from drab to fab by painting the bottom halves of table legs and chairs in a bold, solid color. Change the look each season to impress guests on every occasion.

2. Invent your own artwork. Unleash your inner artist and create unique designs on canvas or fiberboard. Use painter's tape to make abstract designs and add your favorite paint color before finishing each piece with a decal or monogram.

3. Enhance your tired armoires. Play dress up with your furniture, and give armoire doors a makeover. Paint a colorful border around the front of the door and adhere adhesive hooks in the middle for a stylish, yet functional, new piece.

5. Design a lavish headboard for less. Save money and instead splurge on style by painting a "frame" on the wall just above your bed. Rectangular shapes work best for most beds and you can get creative by trying patterns such as stripes, chevron and diamonds.

6. Install faux panel moulding. No moulding? No problem! Buy inexpensive frames and paint them the same color as your baseboard trim. Adhere the frames to the wall (without the backing and glass) for a simple, yet dramatic, look.

7. Make a statement (wall). Pick your favorite pattern trends and bring them to life on one wall of the living room or bedroom. If you're not ready to take on patterns, bold and bright colors will do the trick.

Baltimore Native, Ailey Dancer Receives Princess Grace Award

By Stacy M. Brown

She started dancing at the age of three after her mother went to a Target store and picked out a ballet outfit just to see how her toddler would look in it and for Courtney Celeste Spears, it's like she never took the leotard off.

"I freaked out and when I got the outfit, I was like, 'I want to do ballet' and my mom laughed and told me that I hadn't even started dancing yet," said Spears, a graduate of the Baltimore School for the Arts and currently a senior in the Ailey/Fordham University BFA program in dance with a minor in communications studies. "My mom then took me to ballet class and the rest is history."

History that now includes being the recipient of the prestigious Princess Grace Foundation-USA Award, which provides more than $1 million to artists in theater, dance performance, choreography and film. The annual awards continue the legacy of Princess Grace Kelly of Monaco, who helped emerging artists pursue their artistic goals during her lifetime.

Spears was selected as one of two dance scholarship recipients for 2015.

"I started crying when I heard that I had gotten the scholarship," she said. "I was very dramatic and I had to apologize to the representative on other line because I just busted out in tears. It didn't hit me until I got an email from them and that's when I realized that I didn't dream it."

Spears says that she has enjoyed every moment of her dance experience. She also says she didn't realize when she was younger that dance was something she could do professionally.

"Then I went to a really small studio in Columbia, Maryland and that was the beginning of the transformation of my love of dance from a hobby to a passion," she said.

Ballet teacher Maureen Wheeler told Spears that she had a bright future and recommended that she attend the Baltimore School for the Performing Arts.

"It was there that I thought about dance as a career option and now things changed from love and passion to wanting to make a career out of dance," Spears said.

In addition to Fordham and Ailey, Spears attended summer programs at Cedar Lake 360, the Juilliard School, and the American Ballet Theatre where she performed works by Matthew Rushing; Igali Perry; Francesca Harper; Nicholas Villeneuve; Christian von Howard; Hope Boykin; and George Balanchine.

She represented Fordham University on the cover of Dance Spirit magazine's September 2013 "Higher Education" issue and was the 2014 recipient of the Denise Jefferson Memorial Scholarship.

"Fordham was the first school I auditioned for and the last one I found out about. I auditioned and knew I wanted to be in New York City," Spears said. "I could hop on a bus and come back home in three hours so I was thrilled and my school is a two second walk to Lincoln Center, so I was beyond ecstatic."

Spears says she has plans to travel the world.

"I love culture, food and traveling and I truly love that this career allows me to see the world and see this dream that I have," she said. "I want to start a foundation too where I can help be a bridge for children who have natural talent because I was very fortunate to have a wonderful support system."

Governor Hogan Announces 'Maryland Grand Slam' Program

Annapolis—Governor Larry Hogan announced "Maryland Grand Slam," a $2 million program to build stronger communities in Baltimore through homeownership. These funds will be maximized with an additional $1 million from the City of Baltimore following the approval by the city's spending board. Both state and city funds will provide grants to home buyers purchasing through the Maryland Mortgage Program, the state's premier home loan product.

The new Maryland Grand Slam will help make homeownership more accessible by offering prospective buyers four ways to reduce the cost of buying a home, including $7,500 in down payment assistance grants. The initiative builds upon the governor's comprehensive and ongoing efforts to help the city rebound from the civil unrest in April.

"Maryland Grand Slam will help change Maryland for the better by giving hardworking families that extra boost they need to get into the home of their dreams," Governor Hogan said.

The four benefits of Maryland Grand Slam are:

*$5,000 for down payment assistance in the form of an outright grant from the state. The Hogan administration has allocated $2 million from Maryland's rainy day fund for this initiative, a decision affirmed by the state's Board of Public Works in June.

*$2,500 for additional down payment assistance from the City of Baltimore, also in the form of a grant. Baltimore's Board of Estimates approved the program on Wednesday.

*A federal tax credit through the Maryland HomeCredit program that can save the homeowner tens of thousands of dollars over the life of the loan. In addition, Maryland is waiving its usual fee for a savings of as much as $450.

*A 0.25 percent discount on the already low Maryland Mortgage Program interest rate.

Forgotten Black Church Transformed into Memorable Museum

Cherry Hill African Union Methodist Protestant Church in Granite, Maryland before renovation.

By Stacy M. Brown

For years, Louis S. Diggs has researched and documented African-American life in communities in and around Baltimore County while publishing 10 books about black history. A book he wrote in 2001 helped him and his mentor, Lenwood Johnson, uncover a forgotten black community near Randallstown called Granite.

In Granite, Diggs says he and Johnson encountered a distraught woman who pleaded with them to save her old church. The 19th century building that housed the Cherry Hill African Union Methodist Protestant Church—the area's only black church in the 1800s—was close to caving in, according to Diggs.

But, thanks to Diggs' love of black history, the desire to research his own roots and to help others research theirs, and a $400,000 grant secured by Maryland Delegate Adrienne Jones, Diggs and Johnson have restored the building.

The Diggs/Johnson Museum will include more than 9,000 photographs Diggs has collected over the years and numerous artifacts and other collectibles. The museum is scheduled to open on August 22, 2015.

"I was born and raised in Baltimore City and my father left my mom and I and my four siblings when I was a baby and I never spent a day in my father's house," Diggs said, in explaining the desire to research his own history. "I spent 20 years in the Army and 20 years teaching and I noticed that the children couldn't find anything on their history so I started teaching them how to research and they were so pleased to find the bit of history about themselves that they found."

The new museum will help Diggs and others continue to teach about history and ancestry. He said the building with its own rich history is a great place to start. The cornerstone of the building is dated 1887 but in Diggs' research he discovered a news clipping from June 19, 1869 that said a terrible storm passed over Granite and caused a lot of destruction, including damaging the black church. He also found that the Cherry Hill church was built in 1827 but was later abandoned.

"There were the Jesuits from St. Mary's County who came to Granite to build Woodstock College and they brought their freed slaves to build the college and work there," Diggs said, chronicling the groups that have been affiliated with the church.

Eventually, freed blacks purchased the property and rebuilt it, and it remained functioning until about the early 1970s.

The church took various names over the years, including African Union First Colored Methodist Protestant Congregation, Sacred Heart Chapel of the Church of God and Cherry Hill AUMP.

Diggs says that he and Johnson were able to contact Helen Johnson, the last minister of the Cherry Hill church who pleaded with them to restore the building before she died.

"The idea of converting the church to a museum came from Delegate Adrienne Jones because she knew that I was getting up in age and she felt that the thousands of photographs I have created of African-American life in Baltimore County needed to be protected, stored and shared with the wider community, and that both Lenwood and I would always have a place to share our experiences and researching the history of African-American life and communities in Baltimore County that has never been documented," Diggs said.

Diggs said the building now has a new floor and roof as well as windows and frames. A bathroom has been put into the building and the original pulpit has been restored.

With the restoration complete — Diggs said a private donor gave $10,000 for a projector and screen that will be used for lectures and classes — everyone is excited about the grand opening.

"I love black history, I love history," he said. "Now, we'll be better equipped to teach others about their history and I'm very excited about this."

Inspired Baltimorean opens SAFE Center for youth

By Andrea Blackstone

A safe haven where youth can learn during the summertime, on weekends and after school will open its doors during a grand opening on Saturday, August 15, 2015.

Van Brooks, 27, founded Safe Alternative Foundation for Education (S.A.F.E.). Through outreach and speaking engagements, Brooks shares the importance of obtaining an education and having an alternate career plan in life, in the event that a first plan is altered as his was when his athletic career was cut short by a devastating injury.

SAFE Center, located at 1501 W. Lexington St. in Baltimore, will allow the foundation to further its mission. Focus areas will include science, technology, engineering, art, math (S.T.E.A.M), literacy, health and fitness. Brooks anticipates he will operate the SAFE Center with the assistance of volunteers for the first six months. After enough funding becomes available, Brooks says that a few of SAFE'S current volunteers will be hired.

Youth will be invited to visit the SAFE Center beginning Tuesday, August 18, 2015, although formal programs are not scheduled to begin until mid-September.

"The first couple of weeks is just for the kids to come and go, and kind of get to know us, to know we are there, to know what we offer, and it's a way for us to get to know the kids as well. Before we start programs, we're going to bring in potential partners to present their programs that they offer to the kids, and then the kids will then decide whether or not if that's something they would want to have at the center," Brooks said.

The Baltimorean grew up in the community where the center is located. He recalls using facilities and participating in free activities, which Brooks says gradually disappeared over the years.

"We'll actually be one of the only facilities in the area offering the things that we are going to offer for free," Brooks said.

Brooks' primary goal was to become a professional athlete, until he was paralyzed as a teenager in 2004. He broke his neck while attempting to make a football tackle. The former athlete was led to start his foundation, and launch the SAFE Center, which will focus on offering pro-

*A youth center called the SAFE Center, founded by Van Brooks opens in the Franklin Square community of West Baltimore City. Free programs for middle schoolers will include science, technology, engineering, art, math (S.T.E.A.M), literacy and physical fitness. grams for middle school students.

"Everything I went through inspired the foundation and the center," Brooks said. "In 2012, eight years after my injury, I was able to take my first steps on my own. A couple of days after that, I woke up from a dream that said, 'Hey, start this foundation.' So that was a direct result of my paralysis. The mission comes from what I went through after my paralysis. I was 16 years old, so I was still a kid, and still had my life ahead of me. All I did was focus on athletics, and I didn't focus on my education. When my athletic ability was taken away from me, the only thing I had to fall back on was my education."

As a result of his personal experience, Brooks now promotes the message of youth having a back-up career plan. Today, the Towson University alumnus is fully independent. Brooks credits an incredible support system with helping him to navigate through life after paralysis.

"My way of trying to repay them back is to give those in need the support that I received," Brooks said.

Sakina Stamper, 29, is a senior attending the University of Baltimore. She also wants to pay it forward. The business administration major specializing in entrepreneurship is Brooks' intern. Stamper, who grew up in Baltimore City, said that she always wanted to be a part of a non-profit and wants to start her own someday. Stamper has been helping Brooks to prepare for SAFE Center's grand opening, which will include a block party, back-to-school giveaway, prizes and other activities.

"I feel really, really great about giving back and helping people. It's something that I've always done on my own," Stamper said. "This capacity that I'm doing it now, it just feels so great because this is all for the children, and letting them know that they are not alone, and that we are doing our best to change the direction that the world is going in."

Brooks is still pursuing additional sponsor and donors for the SAFE Center. As smaller needs arise, individuals may donate items through a Walmart wish list. Monetary donations are accepted via www.safealternative.org/donate. For more info about the SAFE Center, visit: www.safealternative.org.

Tips for cleansing your body the healthy way this summer

By Andrea Blackstone

Lisa Consiglio-Ryan takes the guess-work out of eating healthier and cleansing the body. The former elementary schoolteacher and master teacher, has a passion for helping busy women embrace clean living. After finding relief from fibromyalgia and other health challenges by eating healthy foods and regular acupuncture, she discovered a second career as a certified integrative nutrition health coach. For the last five years, Consiglio-Ryan has helped others exchange processed foods for anti-inflammatory whole foods including plants, greens, gluten-free grains and organic produce.

Through her coaching business—Whole Health Designs, LLC—Consiglio-Ryan teaches nutrition courses online, runs a clean living community and makes organic, cleansing juices for customers in Annapolis, Baltimore and the Washington, D.C. area. She offers programs such as the “Raw Renewal 7 Day Detox.” The summer program incorporates eating raw foods and taking a break from animal protein. Each participant gives up processed foods for seven days to give their body’s digestive system a cleansing break. Consiglio-Ryan recommends completing a seven-day summer raw food cleanse once per season, followed by clean eating. What does cleansing mean in plain language?

“My definition of cleansing is actually just giving your body a break, so that you can learn what your body needs for your unique body. We are so different, so it is really taking time to pay attention to what works for your unique body,” Consiglio-Ryan said. “It’s a great way to give your system a break by eating anti-inflammatory foods. Those foods are your fruits, your vegetables, quinoa—things like that are not going to be heavy on your system, because when you become acidic and inflamed, that leads to chronic disease over time. We really want to prevent that.”

A first cleanse can help set healthy eating habits in motion, such as taking the time to understand when buying organic fruits and vegetables is most beneficial.

(Left) Lisa Consiglio-Ryan is a clean living advocate who offers health coaching, detox programs and juice cleanses. Over 1000 people from eight countries have completed her summer “Raw Renewal 7 Day Detox” program. (Right) Avocado Plus Tomato Salad with Hot Stuff Dressing. Consiglio-Ryan recommends consulting The Environmental Working Group (EWG) via www.ewg.org to review food scores. She also suggests becoming familiar with The Dirty Dozen list, which names fruits and vegetables with the highest amount of pesticide residue, and The Clean 15 list, which identifies fruits and vegetables containing the least amount of pesticides.

“What I would do—especially if you’re working with your budget—is that you will definitely buy organic for anything on The Dirty Dozen list, such as apples, things like that. There is really no negotiating...with that because really when you’re detoxing [cleansing], you’re trying to get rid of toxins [in your body], you’re not trying to put them back. If you have an avocado in your smoothie, no worries if it is conventional. Save a little bit of money and do that,” Consiglio-Ryan said.

The health coach said that during cleansing, consuming nutrient-rich foods allows people to eat more food without weight gain. Consiglio-Ryan explained that after her female clients complete a cleanse, they typically lose an average of four to six pounds. Men usually shed 10, although results vary depending on body type for both sexes. Glowing, clear skin, bright eyes, clearer emotional awareness, better sleep and increased energy are often additional benefits that result from completing the Raw Renewal 7 Day Detox.

Raw Power Smoothie Pops
For recipe, visit:
www.baltimoretimes-online.com

Before beginning any cleansing program, Consiglio-Ryan suggests setting some type of goal or intention.

“Actually, I like to write mine down and put it up in my office, or some people tell friends or family, ‘I am doing this because.’ If we don’t know the intention behind whatever plan we’re starting, when enthusiasm lags, we’re either going to give up or really have a hard time,” Consiglio-Ryan said.

She explained that cleansing can be difficult at first for individuals who are accustomed to drinking caffeine, coffee, alcohol and things that are very acidic and inflammatory. People who eat sugar-filled or processed foods may also experience more challenges while attempting to cleanse their bodies.

As a second step, the health coach also mentioned the importance of thinking about your water intake while cleansing.

“You really want to flush out your toxins as much as possible, and water helps with that,” Consiglio-Ryan said.

The third step would involve planning by having a shopping list for recipes, following a regimen and organizing meal preparation. Consiglio-Ryan reminded that change takes time. Having a coach or guide can prevent the return of old eating habits.

“Planning equals success,” Consiglio-Ryan said. “If you have your plan set, there is really no way you will fail.”

Get your crabs curbside at Phillips Inner Harbor location

By Jamie Rockynore

It's difficult to live in Maryland and not know about Phillips restaurants. This summer, Phillips has spiced things up by introducing "Curbside Crabs!"

Phillips crabs are well known all over Maryland with locations at Baltimore's Inner Harbor; Annapolis; Ocean City; and Arundel Mills just to name a few. Their menu features fresh seafood caught in the Chesapeake Bay.

Curbside Crabs is an easy process, which is available at the Baltimore Inner Harbor location. It allows customers to pre-order crabs and have them brought out to their car.

When the order is ready, a text is sent to the customer let them know and the customer replies upon arrival. Then the order is taken out to the customer—it's that easy!

The crabs are $55 a dozen for medium crabs. Other size crabs are available on request. This price is in effect until September 30, 2015.

Before operating the restaurants, A.E. Phillip and Son caught crabs, fish and oysters and brought them to be sold at Lexington Market. Business was booming and the idea for a restaurant came about. Their first restaurant was built in 1956 in Ocean City, Maryland, and is still open today.

Shirley Phillip, the wife of A.E. Phillip created memorable recipes including: crabcakes and Maryland crab soup, which have been passed down from chef-to-chef and are still being served today.

Recently, I had a chance to enjoy the wonderful crabs and crabcakes at Phillips located at Baltimore's Inner Harbor. The service was great and Phillips caters to their guests in a swift and professional manner. So the next you are thinking of eating some crabs, take advantage of the Curbside Crabs before the summer ends!

Back packs, pony rides at Back to School Extravaganza

By Andrea Blackstone

In many households, back-to-school preparation will soon be in full swing. On Sunday, August 9, 2015, Annapolis area youth began preparing for the upcoming school year, while enjoying festivities on a sunny Sunday. Stacks of book bags were distributed to students at a free Back To School Extravaganza held in the parking lot of the Boys & Girls Club, located at Wiley H. Bates Heritage Park. The addition of free pony rides, snowballs, games, face painting, a bounce house, music and free food created a festival-like atmosphere. The Boys & Girls Clubs of Annapolis & Anne Arundel County (BGCAA) collaborated to co-host the successful effort with Moon's Barbershop, which is located at 904 West Street. Moon's Barbershop won the 2011 and 2012 Steve Harvey Neighborhood Award for best barbershop in America.

"We are thrilled to be partnering with Moon's Barber shop to ensure that all young people have backpacks and schools supplies for the fall semester. We strive to do all we can for local youth and are grateful to Moon's Barbershop for helping to bring the Back To School Extravaganza to the Boys & Girls Club at Bates, and for opening it up to the entire community," Steven Cornette, CEO of BGCAA said.

BGCAA's reach includes youth ages six to 18 who cannot afford, or may lack access to other community programs. Edward Moon, owner of Moon's Barber shop, is known for giving great haircuts and volunteering along with fellow barbers, family and friends called "Team Moon." Five years ago, Moon and Melvin L. Brown co-founded an annual back-to-school backpack and school supply giveaway. Moon's wife, Colleen Moon and Brown's wife, Crystal Johnson Brown have both involved since the inception of the project.

Before the Back To School Extravaganza, Edward remarked that his goal was to reach 500 students who need school supplies and backpacks. However, it was estimated that over 1,000 book bags were distributed, and 1,250 youth and families attended the first-time event.

"When I was raised...in N.Y., and we went to the barbershop, that was the place that you could always get your advice or get a couple of dollars. The older guys, they had the wisdom and the understanding. They were always giving back to the community....," Edward said, reflecting on his foundation of giving back to others.

Edward's close friend, Robert Hector, III has volunteered to assist with the backpack and school supply giveaways for five years. He works at William Reese & Sons Mortuary in Annapolis. He represented the business, during this year's Back To School Extravaganza, while providing hands-on assistance. William Reese & Sons Mortuary reportedly contributed monetary support to help students begin the school year on a positive note.

The benefit of uniting for a good cause trickled down to help grandparents who wanted to ensure that their grandchildren were prepared for school. Additionally, parents like Laya Baker, who is a mother of three children, received flyers notifying them about the event. After receiving book bags and school supplies, the Baker children enjoyed jumping in a bounce house as their mother stood nearby.

"You've got the moon bounce, the pony rides, free food, backpacks and supplies. That's nice," Baker said. "Basically, when you've got three kids, it's kind of hard, so when anybody lends a helping hand, it's always appreciated."

The event also offered fellowship. Classmates, volunteers, relatives, neighbors and old friends of all ages conversed while enjoying food and activities. Taryn Parker, 7, and her brother, Jayden Parker, 9, rode ponies as their parents—Scott and Lauren Parker—waited for them. Scott was born and raised in Annapolis. He attended school with Colleen Moon. He explained that his primary purpose for attending the Back To School Extravaganza with his family was to support it.

"It's a beautiful thing, just to see the smiles on the

AACC's new internship coordinator wants to match skills with needs

Annapolis—Nakia Barriteau, Anne Arundel Community College's (AACC) new internship coordinator, is seeking businesses, nonprofit organizations and government agencies to participate in the college's internship program.

Barriteau has a bachelor's degree from Hampton University and a master's degree from the University of Baltimore. She discovered her niche of linking people with opportunities when she worked with middle school girls while studying for her master's degree at University of Baltimore.

"I developed a passion for helping people to recognize their potential and achieve their goals," she said.

Barriteau comes to AACC from the Covenant House in Washington, D.C., where she was a senior employment development specialist. She also worked at the District of Columbia/Northern Virginia Transition Services Office of Job Corps and the Family and Children's Services of Central Maryland. As part of her responsibilities, she connected teens, young adults and older adults re-entering the workplace with internships and jobs. She assessed job and work readiness skills and prepared job seekers with mock interviews and résumé reviews.

She is looking forward to working with employers in this community. To participate in AACC's internship program, visit www.aacc.edu/internships.
