SIGNPOSTS AS YARD ART

Tumbleweed Smith

Danny Bollinger of Dallas is a popular figure at Canton's First Monday Sale where he has five stalls. He's had them for years. Each stall is full of junk.

"Yeah, I collect junk," says Danny. "You wouldn't believe how many people love junk. I have trailers full of it. It's real junk and people buy it."

Tumbleweed Smith

A few years ago, Danny did something unusual. "During the Covid shutdown, which lasted a lot longer than I thought it was going to, I would hang out in my front yard," says Danny. "So, for years and years, I would always ask people what their home town was. I had this idea, you know in the TV series MASH where they have the signposts like Seoul, 500 miles or whatever it is. I said I'm going to do that.

When people get a new fence, they put the old fence on the curb for the trash people to come get it. So I went around my neighborhood and I got the wood from the old fences. Then I went to Home Depot and I got eight 4 by 4s that were eight feet tall, spaced them out and planted them in my front yard. People walk by my house that is right by White Rock Lake. The area neighborhoods lead right by my house to get to the lake. Nobody was working at that time so they were walking, walking their dog or their kids and I would just ask them 'what's your home town?' I would sit on the tailgate of my pickup and paint the name of their hometown on a fence board in different colors and nail it to the signpost and it ended up, there were 278 different hometowns.

There were a lot of people in my neighborhood from all over I would put an arrow on some of the boards indicating the direction of the town and how many miles it was. There are a lot of funny stories that came out of there. I put Hell on one of the boards, painted it in red and put an arrow down. That one really upset some people. Then I put Heaven with an arrow up."

The signs were three inches by three feet. There were about 34 or 35 per pole. Someone didn't like it so they called the city and made a complaint. The city inspector came out to investigate.

"The woman inspector knocked on my door and I talked to her and she's like, 'look, here's the thing, you know they complained about your yard but it's art, so you can have art in your yard all you want.' So I said thank you. I had art in my yard. She loved it. I told her what it was, she had no problem with it."

Danny had a yard sale and a man came by and bought the entire display.

"He lived about three blocks away and he put them on his barn, his shed in his back yard so they're all on his shed. Dang, I wish I had them back."

Danny published a magazine about basketball, had a variety of jobs and ended up as a photographer for the Dallas Mavericks for eighteen years.

She is survived by her son and his wife, Shaun and Camellia Acker, and their sons, Cohen and Payton Acker. She is also survived by several step-children and their families.

Glenda was predeceased by her parents and her son, John Douglas McBryde. She was also predeceased by her prior husbands whom she jokingly said she beat by outlasting: Otto Brooks, Noble Lee Roberts, F.M. Holder, Billy Acker, and Tom Phillippi.

Glenda's educational and professional journey was as diverse as her life experiences. In her early years, she was a carnival attendant, a race car driver, a police officer, a cosmetologist, a mechanic, and even took jobs picking fruits and vegetables to get her family out of California. In 1980, at the age of 33, she became a licensed practical nurse. She practiced nursing for 35 years before changing careers to work as a prison guard. She retired from the prison and thereafter enjoyed going on trips and spending time with family and friends.

Glenda will be missed and remembered for how she loved the people she came in contact with. In the end, she left behind many that she treated as her own children whether they shared her blood or not. She taught us all that the value of a life lived is the people whose lives you influenced and Glenda was priceless.
