Tumbleweed Smith

John Ballew of Saginaw grew up in the Panhandle town of Memphis where his grandfather was a bootlegger. John wrote a book about his colorful grandfather titled THE HALL COUNTY GANGSTER, RAYMOND BALLEW. Since there is no newspaper in Memphis anymore, John puts stories about his hometown on Facebook. He's kind of the Memphis newsboy and has a big following.

John likes to write about his hometown. His latest book, Hall County: The Greatest Generation is about how black soldiers were treated during WWII. During the war the US army had a black blood supply and a white blood supply.

"They were both red, but they separated them."

The Hall County veteran's annual about servicemen from Memphis was published after the war.

"During the war, Hall County was gung ho. There was a serviceman from Hall County in every major battle. The book came out and they were all proud. All the white soldiers had a picture in the book, along with their name, parents names, what they did in High School, who they married, where they served, what medals they had and when they got out. There was a whole little section for each person, each white guy and there were only white guys in the 900 pages of the book. On the very last page, there was a section that read 'and the Negro soldier also served.' There were 38 names listed with no pictures, no description, no anything.

I'm not real bright, but I considered that systemic racism in 1947. They weren't even aware that that's what it was. That's just the way it was back then. Some of those black soldiers had very responsible positions and served just like the white guys.

For the past two years I've been doing my best to find out all I can on those 38 soldiers that just had their names in that book. So far, I've found about three quarters of them and what I found was just a few pictures. The black culture didn't take pictures and the Memphis Democrat newspaper didn't go over the hill and take pictures of them. They took pictures of the white guys coming home, but they didn't take any pictures of the black guys, there's no picture of the black guys in the Democrat.

I went to the individual, I've been to the army bases, I've been to the National Archives, and I've been to museums and libraries. I got the most help when I went to the homes of the black veterans families. Some of them had pictures of their veterans. I found enough to fill a little blurb on each one of those 38 people, where they served, what they did and when they came home. I also found out when they died."

John's Facebook page is: Memphis on the Red. He has an archive of historic photographs from Memphis.

"There's a Memphis on the Mississippi and a Memphis on the Nile, but the Memphis on the Red beats them all by a mile."

Attend the many activities.....

A Fun Zone will be set up with Gellyball, bounce houses and more for kids for free. There will be a shopping market opening at 8 a.m. with more than a dozen vendors.

The Hopkins County Chamber of Commerce will have a vendor site selling all things stew-related.

For carry-home stew, quart tickets are $15.
