Meet Our Staff

Katy Riddle has 15 years of experience in the chamber industry and has served as the executive director for the Manchester Chamber of Commerce since 2018. She believes in the power of partnerships and strives to create engaging programs that help Manchester's business community thrive.

Prior to her current role, she managed the branding efforts for the Rutherford County Chamber, and before that, worked for two Nashvillebased public relations firms, and at Middle Tennessee State University in both the alumni and career development offices.

Katy earned a Bachelor of Science in public relations and a Master of Education from MTSU. She serves on the board of directors at the state level for the Tennessee Chamber of Commerce Executives Association and Tennessee Association of Community Leadership, and locally for the Sportsmen & Businessmen's Charitable Organization. She and husband Brad have two children, Karsyn and Clay.

Katie Anderson joined the Manchester Chamber staff in June 2020 and currently serves as director of membership engagement. In this role, she recruits members, leads the ambassador program, and manages member communication.

Katie has an extensive background of sales and business development. She has created community partnerships between former employers and nonprofits, with a passion for small business, economic growth, and tourism. She is a graduate of the Tennessee Chamber of Commerce Executives Institute and a supporter of the United Way of South Central TN. She loves spending time with her three children, Dustin, Victoria, and Elizabeth, and grandchildren, Sophia, Xander, Denver, and Sawyer.

Marjorie Mierzwak joined the Manchester Chamber staff as the administration assistant in August 2022. With an extensive background in social services and finance, she brings a commitment to community relations and service to the organization. She is the friendly voice and face that welcomes people to the office and keeps the organization running efficiently. Marjorie has two grown children, Dominic and Carolyn, along with several grandchildren.

Every year, the Manchester Chamber honors the best of business at its Annual Awards Gala, a signature event celebrating the achievements and dedication of local businesses and individuals. 2024's 48th Gala brought together community leaders for an evening of recognition and reflection.

With a focus on the theme of partnerships, the event highlighted the role collaboration plays in driving success. Attendees enjoyed a formal program led by emcee Brad Goodwin, who described the gala as "Manchester's own Academy Awards." Awards were presented to outstanding businesses and community members, showcasing their impact and commitment to making Manchester a thriving place to live and work.

The Gala remains a key moment on the Chamber's calendar, providing an opportunity to celebrate milestones and foster connections within the local business community.

A Hub of Connection, Learning & Community

The Coffee County Manchester Public Library

> By Richard J. Klin Photography by Ashleigh Newnes

APHANIE GRAGG has been the youth services librarian and event coordinator of the Coffee County Manchester Public Library since 2022. The Manchester area is in a period of enormous growth. The library system has absorbed these changes — and evolved accordingly.

Libraries have always been central to communities and functioned as broad-based resource centers. With the explosion of the internet and an entirely new way of disseminating writing and information, the traditional role of the library has expanded dramatically nationwide. The Coffee County Manchester Public Library has utilized strategic outreach, advertising, and community partnerships.

When Gragg first joined the library team, there were a small number of programs with limited attendance: three to six kids. That range is now seven to 15 kids. The library has been able to expand its offerings and attract a larger audience. There are now events almost every day of the week and sometimes two or three events per day.

When Gragg was hired, she was told to expect about 125 kids for her first summer reading. Instead, the total for her reading was over 400. And in a very small amount of time, the summer reading program has experienced a tremendous increase in participation, with over 629 attendees in 2024 alone.

As if this regular programming was not extensive enough, the library has also been actively involved in the community.

"We've collaborated," Gragg recounted, "with schools, businesses, and local organizations on various initiatives, including book fairs, community events, and educational workshops. These partnerships have not only helped to promote the library but have also provided valuable resources and support."

The library's expansion could not have transpired without the amazing staff, volunteers, and encouragement of a very supportive community. The additional funding the library has received from grants, sponsorships, and donations have allowed the library to emerge as an even more vibrant and engaging space for all ages.

space for all ages.

There is a dazzling array of offerings for the younger audience. There has been the creation of a magical "enchanted forest" for young children — which grows with each adventure they have in the library — and a juvenile jungle that comes complete with a Harry Potter corner. For the older crowd, there is a state-of-the-art "teen galaxy" tech hub, complete with a full gaming station. This is not, as they say, your parents' library.

The library takes its role as a community hub very seriously. Its drug awareness class, held in collaboration with county officials, was so popular that the library nearly ran out of space.

"As a result, we've implemented measures to support our community, including providing Narcan and drug-related resources."

Educational programs on addiction prevention and recovery are also offered.

Gragg is particularly proud of the recent launch of the "Culinary Chronicles," a series of cooking classes at the library. In partnership with the UT Extension Office and the Coffee County Health Department, the library is providing education on food safety, healthy eating, and basic cooking skills for people of all ages — a hands-on event that was highly successful at the kickoff and is still going strong.

Thanks to the increased foot traffic and community involvement, the library has seen a surge in library card sign-ups, checkouts, and overall usage. Their calendar is now so full that they've created online events to help spread the word, as well as "The Bookmark," a monthly newsletter.

The Coffee County Manchester Public Library's growth and expansion has been nothing short of dramatic. Its role — and the role of many libraries all over the country has a depth and scope that would have been unimaginable a generation back. And, crucially, it should be emphasized that this wealth of programming and activities is free. The library's affordability and accessibility are important factors — especially given that the cost of living can be prohibitively expensive.

The Coffee County Manchester Public Library is hitting a milestone: It has been at its current location for 50 years.

"As we look ahead to the holiday season and our 50th anniversary,"

Gragg concluded, "I'm excited about the continued growth and impact of our library. Together, we've created a welcoming and inclusive space for the community to learn, connect, and thrive."

Mayor Dennis Hunt

COFFFF COUNTY MAYOR

By Sara Hook

OR A man who knows the community he serves, look no further than Mayor Dennis Hunt. Born and raised in Coffee County, Hunt spent his career running a small welding business with no intention of ever being in government. For years, he grew Dennis Hunt and Company LLC, turning it into a crane service. He also sold carports, mini barns, and utility trailers to Coffee County and surrounding counties. It was a surprise when, shortly into a semi-retirement, he felt called to serve.

"Never in my life had I dreamed of being in county government," Hunt said. "A friend of mine said, 'Hey, you need to be county commissioner, nobody's picking up papers,' so I picked up papers — it was that simple."

The mayor's position was also a surprise, but Hunt took on his duty with as much enthusiasm as he did in his role as county commissioner. In early 2024, Hunt was chairman pro tempore on the county commission, while then-Mayor Judd Matheny was chairman. After Matheny's tragic death in April, Hunt was appointed interim mayor. Hunt said he was prepared to do his duty despite the suddenness of his appointment.

"I knew the responsibilities that went with that position, had [not] even the slightest premonition that something would happen to our 54-year-old mayor, but it did, and the minute that happened, I knew that my duty was to assume the mayor's position," Hunt said. "I felt like after IO years on the county legislative body that I was qualified to assume that position, so it was a responsibility that I took on."

Hunt served as interim mayor until he was officially elected for the remainder of Matheny's term, which will expire in 2026. Hunt said his goal is simply to manage day-to-day affairs in a fiscally conservative way.

"I've already made changes in our budget process that saved Coffee County taxpayer's money, and I'm still looking to save even more money," Hunt said. "I do not want to see property taxes increased."

Other top priorities are building the new health department and the new animal control facility. Because of all the restrictions on both projects, Hunt said, the wheels of government always seem to turn slowly — but they are moving.

With three new mayors in Coffee County — Hunt, Manchester Mayor Joey Hobbs, and Tullahoma Mayor Lynn Sebourn — there is a lot of opportunity for growth. Hunt said they will definitely be working together, sitting down quarterly or biannually to look at each other's advances and collaborate on shared issues. It's a promising start to what will be a very productive term.

l've already made changes in our budget process that saved Coffee County taxpayers' money, and I'm still looking to save even more money.

- MAYOR DENNIS HUNT

Mayor Joey Hobbs MANCHESTER MAYOR

By Sara Hook

JOEY HOBBS ran for mayor with a vision of a better Manchester and a love for the community he wanted to serve. With his experience in business and government, there is no doubt it will be an exciting and rewarding time for the city.

Hobbs worked for 22 years at Ravago Manufacturing in roles ranging from business manager to quality engineer to commercial operations manager. Hobbs said that the people he worked with raised him in the business world. They taught him many things that were useful in the day-to-day operations of government.

Hobbs' first foray into government was as a county commissioner. One of his neighbors was retiring from the same position, and he and several others asked Hobbs to run. Hobbs felt his background would help him in the position and that it was time to do some service.

"These jobs are a donation of time. There's not very much monetary value in them," Hobbs said. "I felt [that] my kids were grown, and I could give back to my community."

Eventually, he retired from Ravago with the aspiration of becoming mayor.

"Our city is in a crossroads. We have an unprecedented growth on us. We have a lot of things that the city's facing that I wanted to be mayor to help influence," Hobbs said. "I felt that I could offer up a vision that we could all get our stakeholders to buy in, and then when we come out the other side, look back and be proud of what we've been able to accomplish."

His goals are simple: to fix the things that aren't working and intentionally plan for the future. Having that long-term vision, Hobbs said, will help many of the day-to-day issues go away. Soon, each department will be putting out a strategic plan, and Hobbs said his door is always open to hear what citizens want the community to look like. Together, they will work toward a vision of Manchester's future that everyone can be proud of. It's a challenging task, as Manchester already has so much to offer.

"We have a great way of life here; I think if you visit Manchester, you get the feel of a hometown — everybody knows everybody, our school systems and the city continually rank one of the highest in the state, [and] we have excellent facilities [for] sports," Hobbs said. "It's about our way of life. That's why you want to visit Manchester. We're not Nashville. We're not Murfreesboro. We're Manchester, Tennessee."

Promoting health and wellness in Manchester

How parks and recreation programs are building a healthier community

ANCHESTER'S PARKS and Recreation Department is working hard to bring more opportunities for health and wellness to the community. Through youth sports leagues, fitness classes, special events, and an abundance of green spaces, the department has made it a priority to cater to residents of all ages. These offerings have created a space for physical activity, socialization, and community connection, playing a crucial role in building a healthier Manchester.

Becki Johnson, the assistant director, highlighted the department's comprehensive approach to fitness and wellness.

"We offer a variety of different programs," she said. "Youth programs, fitness classes, water aerobics, a wellness room with cardio equipment, free weights, cable machines, and a Greenway system — that's what we offer to Manchester, and we're really proud of it."

Programs for all ages and abilities

The Manchester Parks and Recreation Department's programs are designed to be inclusive, encouraging people of all ages and fitness levels to get involved. There are youth sports leagues like the Dusty Elam Basketball League, open to children from kindergarten through fourth grade, which provide an early introduction to the benefits of physical fitness.

Johnson noted the enthusiasm in these youth programs, explaining, "Right now, we have 190 players in that league. It's a lot of kids coming together to get active, learn teamwork, and have fun."

The department offers programs for adults, such as the adult soccer league, which Johnson says has a loyal following.

"We have four teams right now for the adult soccer league," she explained. "It's a five-versus-five format, so there are about 20 participants." These adult leagues provide a way for individuals to stay active and social, fostering community connections through team sports.

A hub for senior wellness

One of the department's most dedicated groups is older adults, who are regularly seen walking the track, taking classes, and socializing at the recreation center.

Johnson explained, "If you come in anywhere between 5 a.m. and 11 a.m. on any weekday, our center is full of seniors — whether it be water aerobics, walking the track, using the fitness center, or taking any of our aerobics classes. We have a very steady, regular group of people that we know by first name."

The program even includes Silver Sneakers Classic, a popular aerobics class tailored to older adults, offered twice a week.

A.J. Fox, the parks and recreation director, also noted the unique energy that Manchester's older people bring to the rec center, saying, "We like to say we have the most active seniors around. Our seniors are very fit."

The department's dedicated programs for older adults help keep residents engaged, active, and social — qualities that enhance both physical health and mental well-being.

Senior Yoga

The importance of remaining active cannot be overstated for older adults. That's why Katy Bess, Adoration Hospice's community liaison in Manchester, loves to host chair exercises and yoga sessions at various locations.

Making fitness accessible with parks and green spaces

Beyond indoor facilities, Manchester's Parks and Recreation Department manages five parks across the city, with amenities that encourage outdoor fitness and leisure activities. These parks include multiple playgrounds, nine softball and baseball fields, tennis courts, a skate park, and ample green spaces for free play and community activities.

Fox pointed out, "The parks are free to use for the public, for both city and county residents, and even those just visiting our town."

One unique feature is the outdoor fitness course at Mayor Lonnie J. Norman Memorial Park, modeled after a Ninja Warrior course, which has become a popular attraction. The parks also host Ultimate Frisbee games and are used for soccer, tennis, and even outdoor fitness classes.

"There's a group that actually uses the parks for Ultimate Frisbee," Fox said. "It's a way for people to get out and use the green spaces for active recreation."

Additionally, Manchester's Greenway, which stretches through various parts of the city, provides a scenic path for walking, running, and even outdoor exercises.

"Whether you're training for a 5K or half marathon or just want to take a leisurely stroll and enjoy nature, the Greenway is there," Johnson explained. "It kind of hits all those different venues — it doesn't matter if you're walking at a slow pace or running at a marathoner's speed."

Building connections and strengthening community

Manchester's Parks and Recreation Department is more than just a provider of fitness services — it's a vital part of the community that fosters connections, promotes health, and encourages wellness in ways that extend beyond physical activity. By offering discounted memberships during the winter months and keeping fees low for events like ice skating, the department ensures that wellness opportunities are accessible to everyone.

Fox added, "The big thing for people to realize is that we're not only the rec center, we're also the parks. We offer lots of special events on top of wellness programs."

This approach makes Manchester's Parks and Recreation Department a community hub, bridging the gap between physical health and community engagement.

Serene Day Spa adds to the promotion of health and wellness in Manchester

Located on McArthur St., Serene Day Spa, owned by Becca Jones, is more than just a traditional spa. Since opening in 2018, the wellness center has offered a variety of natural therapies aimed at promoting overall well-being.

"We lean more towards natural wellness," said Jones. "Our focus is on holistic health, not just pampering."

Among its services, Serene Day Spa offers unique treatments like lymphatic massage, a technique that helps move lymphatic fluids through the body, aiding those with conditions like edema or those recovering from surgery.

Jones explained, "Lymphatic massage is a specialty. We're one of the few places in the area offering this service."

In addition to traditional massages, the spa also features red light therapy, which helps with inflammation and joint pain, and allergy reduction treatments.

Jones emphasized the importance of these services: "We have a natural pathic doctor who offers red light therapy, which can help with everything from aching joints to detoxing the body."

A highlight of Serene Day Spa's commitment to health is its annual Health and Wellness Fair, which debuted this year. The event brought together 22 vendors focused on natural wellness and was met with great success.

"We were thrilled with the turnout." Jones said. "The community really showed interest in exploring healthier options."

For Jones, the mission is clear.

"I've always had a passion for health and wellness. It's not just a business for me — it's a way of helping people improve their lives naturally."

This dedication is evident in every aspect of Serene Day Spa, where clients can expect relaxation and long-term health benefits. Serene Day Spa is located at 909 MacArthur St. More information is available on its website or Facebook page.

This Schoolhouse ROCKS!

Manchester City Schools Director Dr. Joey Vaughn on the primacy of education

By Richard J. Klin // Photography by Ashleigh Newnes

R. JOEY VAUGHN is a lifelong resident of Manchester. As city schools director, he has a very special, very personal connection to the community and an acute awareness of how important the school system is to Manchester. Smaller-sized cities have always had a special relationship with the school systems. Schools were the places that offered knowledge — a chance to learn about the world — and often functioned as a community support center.

Manchester's school system has been in existence for over a century. Historically, Manchester's residents have taken great pride in having a small school system that provides incredible services — not only for the students but also for the community's families. This is another prime example of the school system's interconnectedness. Its relevance does not simply come to a halt at the end of the school day. The school system affects entire families, sometimes for many generations.

Academics, Dr. Vaughn reflected, have always been a major emphasis on the part of the school district. There is a drive to make sure that the schools are prepared to provide its students not only the foundational pieces for academic success, but also laying the groundwork for the students to go on to higher education or the workforce.

The Manchester school system strives for a holistic approach. Students score well on state tests, but teachers and administration also work hard to provide other opportunities for the kids.

"We want them to experience field trips. We want them to go to theaters. We want them to see parks."

The admirable intent is for the students to have a vast set of experiences so they will be ready as they continue on in their lives. Arts and education are also a big part of who we are. Manchester schools have music, art, and theater programs — offerings that have sadly become more and more endangered across the country. There are ample, eclectic opportunities for the students to grow. Another central aspect of living in a smaller place is the tight-knit familiarity, where everyone knows everyone else. In Manchester, it would be impossible to be simply a student number or a nameless face in an enormous classroom.

School systems serve as a community's weathervane — widescale changes to a town will be felt immediately by the schools. The COVID-19 pandemic radically altered normal patterns and was something that schools nationwide had to deal with — immediately.

- DR. JOEY VAUGHN

"We were very fortunate in that we were able to stay open, except for a very short time in the spring of 2020," Dr. Vaughn reflected, looking back to a time period when most schools had shut down. In Manchester, though, the schools opened back up right away and just as quickly addressed learning loss.

Manchester's population has grown substantially during the last years, increasing at a rate of 20%. Both of Manchester's elementary schools have almost 600 students. The entire enrollment for the school system is at 1,600 students — a historic high. It's also a city increasingly on the map, a tourist destination and home to the Bonnaroo festival, which has increased in popularity to the point of enjoying international repute.

Population growth is an enviable slot. Small towns across the country are experiencing just the opposite, with devastating social and economic consequences. But growth engenders its own issues. Dr. Vaughn's aim is to retain that treasured community focus. Families, after all, are the fabric of the community.

He is proud of Manchester's rapid rate of population growth. But with that growth comes more and more students, and students with different needs. As the community grows, so does diversity — another point of pride. The emphasis is always to ensure that the school system is meeting the needs of the student population.

"We build those relationships with our families, and we try to meet everyone where they are," Dr. Vaughn concluded.

Manchester City Schools are very much a part of what Manchester is. And that — no matter how much the population growth and subsequent changes — is a constant.

UNLOCKING THE FUTURE

By Amanda E. West

EMONADE DAY, the Major Clarity program, and zSpace technology, combined with the highly interactive On My Own simulation, connect students in Coffee County with potential employers, help them create lifelong partnerships, and direct them toward their ideal career pathways. Opportunities such as these provide essential skills in financial literacy, career exploration, entrepreneurship, and real-world problem-solving, which provides a stronger foundation for long-term success.

Lemonade Day

"Save a little. Share a little. Spend a little." This motto encapsulates the spirit of Lemonade Day, a signature program of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce held every May. This much-anticipated event empowers fourth graders across Coffee County to explore financial literacy, entrepreneurship, self-reliance, and community development—all essential components of the nationally recognized program, which originated in Texas.

Through collaboration with local business leaders, educators, and community members, students learn to develop unique business models, build their brands, analyze competitors, market their products, and make thoughtful decisions about their profits, whether saving, spending, or donating.

"This event is a community builder. Businesspeople, teachers, and students get to collaborate on what a business should look like and put those ideas into action. This is what learning is about. This event started in Manchester City Schools, and now all of Coffee County Schools have joined in. Anytime we can tie the community to our schools, it is a huge benefit," said Dr. Mick Shuran of Manchester City Schools.

As colorful lemonade stands pop up on corners across the area, Lemonade Day continues to showcase the power of education and community partnership in shaping future leaders.

Career Exploration

Instead of waiting until high school, educators in Coffee County introduce seventh and eighth grade students to an elementary version of Major Clarity, a program designed to help them narrow down potential careers and put students on a pathway that fosters long-term success. Once students enter middle school, they register for the advanced version of the program, where they begin a three-year journey investigating over 50 potential career choices. They also take part in a yearly career fair to explore opportunities with local businesses and industries in their top three potential career fields.

The Innovative School Models grant offered by the state of Tennessee provided $2.5 million to expand career and technical education inside the county. Coffee County Middle School used these funds to purchase zSpace technology, which gives students access to three-dimensional, hands-on opportunities using virtual and augmented reality software. Funds were also used to build a new construction lab at Coffee County Central High School, and a complete turnkey Festo STEM lab was added at Raider Academy.

"Students are better informed and prepared to make course decisions as they pertain to their areas of program interest. We have added and dropped programs due to the interest and popularity expressed by students. Our dual enrollment and industry certification numbers are at an all-time high and continue to grow as long as funding is provided. So, without a doubt, students have more opportunities and are taking advantage of them," said Richard Skipper, director of career and technical education at Coffee County Schools.

On My Own

High School

During this highly successful annual event, organizers provide high school students with a booklet containing life scenarios such as how much money they earn, their marital status, and how many dependents they have. Students are then challenged to pay their household expenses based on their calculated net incomes while visiting 12 different stations where volunteers and businesses from the community entice them to purchase vehicles and other items while also sustaining a realistic budget.

Before the simulation officially begins, guest speakers teach students the basics of handling their personal finances, such as how to open checking and savings accounts at a local bank, how to apply for mortgage and car loans, how to use debit cards, and how to balance their checkbooks.

"When students collaborate with peers and interact with community members, they build empathy, communication skills, and a sense of civic responsibility. They learn the importance of teamwork and the value of diverse perspectives, which is crucial in an increasingly interconnected world. As educators, our mission extends beyond academic achievement; we must equip our students to thrive as engaged citizens. By integrating real-world experiences into our curriculum, we empower students to set meaningful goals, make informed choices, and approach their futures with confidence," said Principal Angela Sellers of Coffee County Raider Academy.

A new facility brings new opportunities

By Sara Hook

The Tennessee College of Applied Technology (TCAT) is excited to bring a new facility to Coffee County, providing a campus for TCAT McMinnville in Coffee County and expanding the programs offered in the area. Currently, three technical degrees are available — nursing, industrial maintenance, and truck driving — and the new almost 40,000-square-foot building will provide space for those growing programs and the new cosmetology, welding, and residential, commercial, and industrial electricity programs. These programs will meet a need for higher education in Coffee County, and TCAT McMinnville looks forward to seeing how the new space will allow the college to better serve Coffee County as a whole. Construction is scheduled to be finished in early 2026.

The Blueprints of Success

The Tennessee Small Business Development Center improves the economy "one small business and one opportunity at a time" in Manchester and beyond.

By Gabriel Grant Huff Photography by Ashleigh Newnes

OMETIMES, LAUNCHING a business resembles learning how to ride a bike — minus the stabilizer wheels, handlebars, and the actual wheels while treading up a rocky, steep incline. Bank after bank denies funding the startup to put the project in motion. Aspiring entrepreneurs may lack experience and knowledge about business and financial planning to identify routes for the journey. Some are blocked by the boulders of competitors. Others fall victim to the sharp nails of terrible partnerships. Even more see insufficient skills to navigate the trenches threatening to derail their endeavors.

Success seems lightyears away, problems appear unceasing, and the journey looks downright discouraging until the business owner acquires the help of a counseling network like the Tennessee Small Business Development Center (TSBDC) in Murfreesboro, Tennessee.

Brought about in 1984, the TSBDC is a public service to all counties in Tennessee as a resource partner for the U.S. Small Business Administration. The TSBDC that services Coffee County and the surrounding area is the TSBDC hosted by Middle Tennessee State University (MTSU). MT-SU's small business development center possesses a great relationship with Manchester and the city's local businesses. Experts work to provide for-profit businesses consulting, training, and resources in-person and online, resulting in a proper start, continual growth, and sustainment.

Director Galen Longo leads the TSBDC team's endeavors at MTSU.

"We exist to help small businesses of all sizes and kinds, whether they're getting started or already in business for various things," Longo explained. "We can do a lot, anything from marketing to research to financial research to financial analysis, competitor analysis, industry research — basically anything that a small business would need, short of we can't provide legal services and we can't provide tax services. We also cannot take agency, but we are a center of influence for all things."

Even better, clients procure the service at no charge.

A Tennessee native and MTSU alum two times over, Longo started his career in the banking business in 2003, remaining there for about 20 years prior to receiving an opportunity of a lifetime at TSBDC, joining in July 2023 and getting promoted to director the following November. He completed his master's degree in finance at MTSU, graduating in August 2024.

Truth be told, he possessed zero knowledge of TSB-DC's existence. Now, he loves making people's day. His agency strives to provide education, advice, and research to support suggestions. The business owners make all the decisions. In fact, due to TSBDC, they have more control over their businesses than ever before.

"I like to say we are dedicated to improving the economy one small business and one opportunity at a time," Longo said.

Local city chambers play a significant role in meeting these ambitions, such as the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, where community leaders help connect businesses to the TSBDC. The chamber operates as a center of influence, making the development center visible in the community.

Once those businesses find success, the help does not end there.

"We like to be able to build that relationship with our clients because it's not just a one-and-done," Longo said. "We're working with you. We are a resource partner. We are a center of influence as well as an ongoing source of information — and education and resources — for you and your small business as you grow and thrive in the community."

Without the chamber's partnership, it would have been quite difficult to engage the community on the level of which they have achieved. The Manchester Chamber of Commerce, as well as other city chambers, exist as major stakeholders. Longo's team covers 14 counties in Middle Tennessee, from Coffee County in the east to Perry County in the west. Longo loves to meet with clients off-site, preferably at the client's local chamber of commerce

TSBDC at MTSU, actively managing several hundred clients, exists as one of 14 offices in the state. The whole unit is an accredited member of the National Association of Small Business Development Centers.

"I think it's just the coolest thing in the entire world that I am able to help support these folks and help them thrive, [or] even to be a part of it," Longo added.

Radiating Positivity Through Compassion

The Bonnaroo Works Fund helps locals thrive.

By Sara Hook // Photography by Ashleigh Newnes and submitted by Kelsey Dewald

HAT MANCHESTER event is more iconic than the Bonnaroo Music & Arts Festival? The fireworks, the food, the music, and the thousands of fans make each yearly celebration a day to remember. Yet for many, it isn't the lights and music of Bonnaroo that have changed their lives but the spirit — a spirit of compassion, of community, and of giving back. That is the core of the Bonnaroo Works Fund, and the impact the fund and its supporters have made in Manchester, Coffee County, and hundreds of other communities over the years cannot be overstated.

Perhaps the most obvious of those impacts has been through grants. Since the festival first opened its doors in 2002, Bonnaroo has given out over $8 million in funding to more than 250 organizations. Many of those have been local, but the festival also contributes to regional and international nonprofits. Bonnaroo Works Fund's executive director, Kelsey Dewald, said there is a very intentional hierarchy.

"We start with the local first, Manchester and Coffee County, and that's always top priority. And then wherever we can support the community at large, that's where we expand to," Dewald said. "Manchester and Coffee County is where we consider our home to be, and we want to support that area first. So we might not support as many smaller groups or smaller organizations as we do outside of Manchester and Coffee County, but we want to be a part of helping the community thrive."

Grant recipients may find their homes in Hendersonville, McMinnville, Nashville, and Rutherford County alongside Manchester, Tullahoma, and Coffee County. All of that money is raised by the Bonnaroo festival through donations, ticket fees, or events like silent auctions, Bonna-ROOTS dinners, and the Roo Run 5K.

While the grants might be the most obvious of Bonnaroo's charitable outreaches, it is by no means the only ones. Every year, Planet Roo lies nestled in the center of the festival, between the many stages and tents. In the Planet Roo Nonprofit Village, festival goers can interact with a number of local and regional nonprofits, while nearby at the Academy and the How Stage, they can attend workshops to learn more about composting, mental health, or exercise, among many other opportunities. Outside of the festival, the Bonnaroo Works Fund is aiming to increase its collaboration beyond those grants and donations.

"Bonnaroo can be very inspiring," Dewald said. "We just want to make sure that they have the tools to then go home to their communities and continue doing good with some local organizations from there."

After all, there is more than one way to support and dig into community. Bonnaroo is one way, nonprofits another, sustainability another — the possibilities are endless.

"A community with engaged patrons wanting to make each other better is a good community," Dewald said.

Sustainability is one of Bonnaroo's big initiatives, with reusable cups, a permanent composting pad, and solar panels all part of the festival's effort to reduce its imprint on the environment. It's a challenging task with thousands of patrons each year, but creativity is the Bonnaroovian way.

"Sustainability [is] a huge core value, just based on again reducing the negative impact that we have for the community and increasing the positive impact that we have," Dewald said.

Like Bonnaroo's other giving-back initiatives, the push for sustainability doesn't end when the patrons leave each year. The Bonnaroo Works Fund teams up with fellow nonprofit We Are Neutral to offset the carbon impact of the festival, and together, the groups have worked with housing authorities across Coffee County and nearby counties to replace pipe fittings and lightbulbs, making units more energy-efficient and bills cheaper. The Manchester Coffee County Conference Center has its own set of solar panels, and the Duck River has found itself cleaner partly thanks to the Bonnaroo Works Fund. As with other nonprofits, donations have been monetary, but also of time and materials.

"While we could raise funds at the festival and just write checks to financially support these awesome organizations, that's a less 'Bonnaroo' way to do things," Dewald said. "A more Bonnaroovian approach has a spirit of creativity and has that spirit of engaging others. We don't just want to be a one-time, transactional interaction [with] patrons or organizations within the county. We want to be more of a part of the community and have a little more heart to it, just like the extra spark and love Bonnaroo has compared to other festivals."

The heart of the Bonnaroo Works Fund has changed many a life in Manchester, Coffee County, and beyond, and there's no doubt many of those people have gone on to change others in turn. One by one, a compassionate, positive community is making the world a better place.

Honoring the Legacy of an Iconic Sportscaster

Dream for Weave pays it forward.

By Richard J. Klin

N 2019, Holly and Josh Peterson became the owners of Thunder Radio WMSR. Their sports director was the late Dennis Weaver, a significant force in local sports broadcasting and an enthusiastic booster of athletes and coaches. Known as "Weave," he was the voice of Coffee County sports.

An enormous component of sports broadcasting is devoted to basketball, football, and baseball — part and parcel of WMSR's programming. Dennis Weaver, however, broadened the coverage to include minor sports that typically weren't part of standard sports broadcasting, such as high school volleyball and middle school soccer. As a play-by-play announcer and sports director, he brought respect and a long-overdue seriousness to these often overlooked sports.

Weaver had been an acclaimed softball coach, and his radio mission was imbued with a deep sense of respect and affinity for community athletics and a mandate to highlight them any way he could. Weaver spearheaded the Friday Night Thunder Scoreboard Show, which could be heard across Middle Tennessee. He also hosted the weekly Coffee Coaches Show on WMSR, where coaches and athletes could come on the radio to speak about the season and their performances. Guests eventually totaled in the hundreds.

Weaver died unexpectedly in 2020. According to Holly Peterson, WMSR had been growing and expanding and wanted to use that expansion to keep Dennis Weaver's legacy — his love of local athletics — alive. Holly, Josh, and a group of other community members began the Dream for Weave Foundation, a 501(c)(3) that distributes money to student-athletes who might be unable to afford athletic equipment. They might also need assistance with dues and sign-up fees, which can be prohibitively expensive. "We had one kid," Holly recalled, "who couldn't play basketball with his glasses but couldn't afford contacts." Dream for Weave bought those for him so he could play.

The foundation's effectiveness and reach have been growing exponentially. For the first year, Dream for Weave raised $4,000 in donations. The contributions in the second year were $15,000. The third year's total was $25,000. Last year, Dream for Weave accumulated $37,000 in donations for local athletes and scholarships. Those are significant increases that provide a lot of help.

Owning a radio station is ideal for spreading the word about Dream for Weave. WMSR also launched a Dream for Weave radiothon, an innovative fundraising method.

Students apply for scholarships during the second semester, in January or February, through their guidance counselor or coach. The foundation then reviews the submitted applications.

Holly and Josh, taking notice of ESPN's ESPYS award ceremony, aired nationwide and crafted their own homegrown version of the award, the Thundies. There is a Thundies awards ceremony where each sport's top athlete — male and female is presented. The foundation now gives out the scholarships at the awards ceremony. Scholarships are decided by a scholarship committee and approved by the nine-member Dream for Weave Foundation Board of Directors.

Holly credits a highly supportive community for Dream for Weave's success. Part and parcel of adolescence is the fear of standing out. Being excluded from something you really want to do — and what your friends are doing — because you don't have the money is horrible. And it's awful no matter how old you are. However, for the student population, it is incredibly hurtful. Kids, quite simply, need to fit in.

Young people face an array of potential difficulties. Having the money to pursue your athletic goals isn't a magic wand, but it can alleviate a lot of unhappiness and provide many opportunities. And those things are vital.
