LATEXO'S FUNNY MAN

Tumbleweed Smith

Roger Greer lives in Latexo, a small town near Crockett in east Texas. He has a unique sense of humor that people seem to appreciate. "When I hear Cancun I think of fast food, not a resort." He had an uncle called Toad. "I didn't know his name was Otis until I was about forty. When he got angry, he'd swell up like a toad frog. When I was about four years old, he kneeled down beside me and told me that if I would drink horse milk, I could see the wind. I believed that until I think it was sometime last week." Roger had a troublesome car. "It was an '81 Diesel Chevette, the only vehicle a Volkswagen Beetle could outrun. When I drove it, people pointed at it and snickered. Some just shook their head in sympathy."

Roger loves characters. "Characters just make life so much better. They seem to make sure the earth stays in its orbit and keep us grounded." He is a pastor in Latexo. He had some experience in radio. "My mother told me to go down there and get a job. So, I did. The owner's son was a blast. He showed me how to turn on the transmitter and said 'if sparks fly out when you flip the switch, don't get alarmed. That's a good thing. It means you're on the air.'"

One of the turntables used to play records was slow. "It could make Dolly Parton sing bass." That station was in Many, Louisiana. He was master of ceremonies for an event in a nearby town. "It was the first annual Hot Tamale Festival in Zwolle, which is about ten miles away. Like all good festivals they had a beauty pageant. I wasn't sure just what to call the winner so I said over the PA system, here she is Miss Hot Tamale. Some ladies in town didn't like the sound of that so years after that they called her the Tamale Festival Queen."

He worked for the US Forest Service for a while. "These guys would drive a brown pickup truck so the tobacco juice stains wouldn't show." Later on, he had some big radio jobs: network newscaster, worked with Focus on the Family, was a popular personality on a Houston radio station near the place where he pastored a church. "My church was right across from Bush airport. I always wanted to paint on the roof of the church the phrase 'Keep praying, you're not on the ground yet.' The planes flew right over the church."

Roger always adlibbed a bunch of funny stuff on the radio and once the owner of the station asked Roger at what age babies stopped using pacifiers. He replied "I don't know, Tom. I'm still using mine."
