OIL, GOATS AND BANJO

Tumbleweed Smith

BJ Mayo of Miles worked in the oil patch 48 years.

"I worked in seven states and spent some time overseas," he says. "I was in Bangladesh then Australia and West Africa where I retired from a major company and started consulting from there."

Tumbleweed Smith

When he was working in the Permian Basin and South Plains, he drove up to 400 miles a day working on oil wells.

"A lot of that was self-imposed. I did it because I didn't want to live in a man camp like I have done before. I didn't care for that too much. I just chose to drive home every day so I could sleep in my own bed at night."

Twenty years ago, he bought a farm near Miles. He lies there now with his wife Diane. The last couple of decades he has worked in the oil fields, farmed and ranched.

"I spent most of my days and evenings in the oil patch, then tried to plow and plant at night. It's not very conducive to good farming."

He is busy in retirement raising cows, sheep, goats, hay and winter wheat. He does an excellent goat call and seems to be able to carry on conversations with cows. Some of his goats get into unusual situations.

"One had a five-gallon bucket stuck on its head. The handle was under his chin and he was running around blindly, hitting the fence. We had to chase it down and hold its legs still until we could get it off while it was squealing and carrying on. Sometimes they get in trees and we have to get them down."

BJ has a Sunday afternoon ritual after church and a visit to Dairy Queen. He writes books. Two have been published by major publishing houses. His first one, ALFIE CARTER is about some experiences in Africa and involves a young girl escaping a difficult environment. Another is SPARROWS OF MONTE NEGRO about pioneer life along the Texas-Mexico border.

"I'm working on several more but currently I'm about halfway finished with one called TWO STEP. I've got 26 books structured. I've just finished building a writing studio using 100 year old barnwood."

BJ is extremely multi-talented. He sang with a gospel quartet 19 years and has played guitar with a group in Arkansas.

"It was Jimmy Driftwood's Music Barn. He's the guy who wrote TENNESSEE STUD. We just dropped in this place one night and I was invited to come on stage. I've played with them twice now. They're true mountain musicians."

He is an accomplished banjo player. He just bought a brand new one that weighs 15 pounds. It's on a strap when he plays.

Wellness: More Than Just the Absence of Illness

By Gabriela Camacho, BSN, RN-BC - Founder, Omega Hydration & Wellness Services

Wellness is not a luxury—it's a lifestyle. In today's fast-paced world, true wellness goes beyond simply "not being sick." It's a proactive approach to living fully—physically, mentally, and emotionally.

At its core, wellness is about balance. It means nourishing your body with healthy food, staying active in ways you enjoy, getting restful sleep, and managing stress before it becomes burnout. It's choosing to invest in your health every day—whether that's through movement, mindfulness, hydration, or preventive care.

Wellness also includes emotional and mental health. Are you feeling connected to others? Do you make time to unplug and reset? Taking care of your mind is just as critical as taking care of your body.

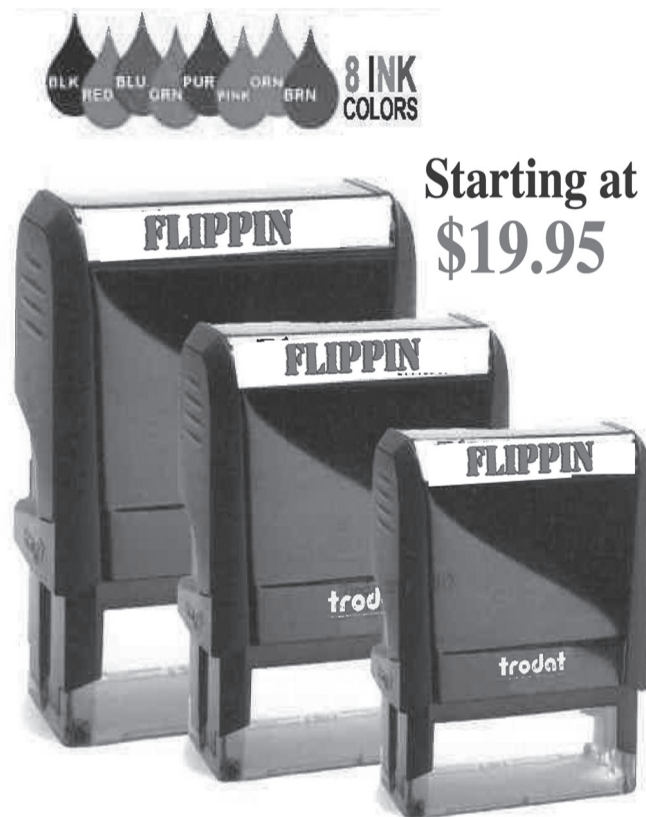

Integrative wellness, which blends modern medicine with functional practices like IV therapy, massage, nutrition, and supplements, is on the rise for a reason—it empowers individuals to heal, thrive, and age with grace.

Remember, wellness is personal. It doesn't look the same for everyone, and that's okay. It's not about being perfect—it's about being intentional.

Whether you start by drinking more water, going for a walk, or setting boundaries, every small step counts. After all, your health is your greatest wealth.
