Rising Kites helps families celebrate “the gift of Down syndrome”

When Danielle Grandholm’s daughter, Sammy, was born in 2020, her arrival came with an unexpected diagnosis – Down syndrome. Danielle remembers the moment vividly.

“The nurses brought her over to me, and I just knew,” she says. “I asked, ‘Does she have Down syndrome?’ and the whole room went silent.”

That silence marked the beginning of a deeply emotional journey. While hospital staff were kind and supportive, Danielle and her husband were sent home from Lakeland Hospital with little more than a two-page Google print-out explaining what Down syndrome is. The couple found themselves navigating a maze of unfamiliar medical terms, specialists, and emotional challenges – and doing so in the isolation of the COVID-19 pandemic.

“We felt completely alone,” Danielle recalls. “We didn’t know anyone walking this road.”

Out of that experience came Rising Kites, a Bridgman-based nonprofit dedicated to helping families facing a new Down syndrome diagnosis, find connection, encouragement, and hope. Founded in 2021, the organization provides hospitals, birthing centers, and prenatal clinics with resource bags designed to reach families from the very beginning of their journey.

Each Rising Kites Bag includes a letter from Danielle’s family, a book about Down syndrome, a children’s story featuring a child with the condition, and a folder filled with practical resources – from state-specific support services to contact information for nearby families.

“We wanted parents to know they’re not alone,” Danielle says. “That their child is something to celebrate.”

A recent guest on The WSJM Morning Show with Ken & Friends, Danielle says since the first bag was delivered four years ago, Rising Kites has distributed more than 3,400 bags across all 50 states and in over 22 countries.

That global reach began simply – through word of mouth and social media. “Once you enter the Down syndrome community, you meet families all over the world,” Danielle says. “It’s a very connected group of people.”

Just hop on the brightly lit trolley, and we'll whisk you away to lights in beautiful downtown St. Joe before crossing over to the Benton Harbor Arts District for Art Hop. The real treat is waiting at Thayer Park, where the trolley drops off to see Santa Claus. He'll be there, ready to share some holiday cheer. This will be a 30-minute route returning to the Church Street lot every half hour. On Saturday starting back at the Church Street city parking lot, the Jolly Trolley will follow the same sparkling route. But this time, we're taking the party even further—all the way to the wonderful Eden Springs Park for Holiday Train Rides. The Jolly Trolley ride is FREE both nights, but the miniature train ride is just $5.00 per person (cash only). This will be a 60-minute route returning to Church Street lot every hour. The Jolly Trolley is presented by Visit Southwest Michigan and Clement Construction with a special thanks to Holt Bosse for helping make this magic happen.

How a Boiler Heats Your Home:
A Step-by-Step Breakdown

In the heart of many homes, especially in colder climates, sits a boiler—a reliable workhorse that transforms fuel into cozy warmth. Unlike forced-air furnaces that blow hot air through ducts, boilers heat water to distribute warmth via radiators, baseboards, or underfloor systems. Understanding how a boiler works reveals an efficient, even heating process that's been refined over decades. This article explains the mechanics, from fuel ignition to radiant comfort, in about 500 words.

The journey begins with the fuel source. Most residential boilers run on natural gas, propane, oil, or electricity, though high-efficiency models may use biomass or solar assists. Gas and oil boilers dominate due to availability and cost. Fuel enters the system through a dedicated line—gas via pipes from the utility, oil from an onsite tank. An electric boiler simply draws from the home's wiring.

Next, the burner ignites. In gas boilers, a valve opens, releasing gas into the combustion chamber where an electronic igniter (or pilot light in older units) sparks it alight. Oil boilers pump fuel through a nozzle, atomizing it into a fine mist that mixes with air and ignites. Electric boilers skip combustion entirely, using immersed heating elements like a giant kettle. Safety sensors monitor flame stability; if the fire fails, the system shuts down to prevent gas leaks.

The magic happens in the heat exchanger, typically a cast-iron or steel assembly surrounding the burner. As flames roar, they transfer intense heat—up to 2,000°F—to the exchanger's metal walls. Cold water flows through tubes or channels within this exchanger, absorbing thermal energy without mixing with combustion gases. Modern condensing boilers go further: they capture heat from exhaust vapors, boosting efficiency to 98% versus 80% for conventional models.

A circulator pump then pushes the now-hot water—usually 140–180°F—through a closed-loop piping system. In hydronic setups, this loop branches to radiators (cast-iron or steel fins), baseboard convectors (finned tubes along walls), or radiant floor tubing embedded in concrete. Heat radiates or convects into rooms, warming objects and people directly rather than just air. A thermostat signals the boiler to fire when temperatures drop below setpoint, maintaining comfort.

Return water, cooled to 120–140°F, flows back to the boiler via gravity (in older systems) or the pump. An expansion tank accommodates water's thermal growth, preventing pressure spikes. Aquastats and pressure relief valves ensure safe operation; excess pressure vents harmlessly.

Finally, exhaust gases exit through a flue or chimney. Non-condensing boilers vent hot gases directly; condensing units cool them first, extracting latent heat and draining acidic condensate safely.

The result? Silent, draft-free warmth with zoned control potential—each room's radiator or loop can have its own valve. Boilers last 15–30 years with annual maintenance: cleaning the exchanger, checking pumps, and bleeding air from radiators.

In summary, a boiler converts fuel to heat via combustion or resistance, transfers it to water in a heat exchanger, circulates that water to emitters, and recycles cooled return flow—all orchestrated by sensors and pumps. It's engineering elegance delivering winter comfort, one degree at a time.

The Pet Corner

In today's crazy, mixed-up world, it is easy to become judgmental. So many things look wrong, and many are wrong, but often times our rush to judge what seems wrong requires us to take a step back and give it another look. Which often leads to many questions. Such as, why do so many animals end up homeless? Why don't people take better care of their pets? Why are they allowed to roam and get lost? Why do people move and leave their pets behind? Why don't elderly people, or anybody for that matter, set up a plan for what happens to their pets if they become unable to care for them or die? The fact of the matter is we are, all of us, one car accident, one serious illness, and many are one paycheck away from losing the ability to care for ourselves let alone our pets. It is easy to cast judgment on those we see as irresponsible and uncaring, but planning ahead for the unexpected is just not on some folks' radar, and making it a crime or a reason to condemn them only adds to the problem. It's easy to say, make a plan for what will happen in an emergency, and of course, it's the responsible thing to do as far as pets are concerned. But what if you truly have no one to fall back on? No one to take your pets in when you are suddenly in the hospital or must go into assisted living, or a relocate for a job that simply doesn't include taking your pets along? Stuff happens, life happens, and a very wise woman, who dedicated a large part of her life to pet rescue, once told me that when you're working in rescue, you must remember the human factor and not judge. So, in this season of thanksgiving, I give special thanks to all those who work in rescue in any way, shape, or form—in shelters, in foster homes, in rescue groups—and who do not pass judgment on the humans involved but simply do the right thing and give comfort and shelter to the homeless pets who come their way.

We're entering into the holiday season, so here are some things to look forward to in the next month.

Fuzzybutz Pet Bakery will hold a Pet Pics with St. Nick on Friday, November 21, from 5-8 pm, to coincide with the Luminary Festival in downtown St. Joseph. Bring your pets to have their photo taken with Santa.

Berrien County Animal Services will hold a free vaccine and microchip clinic on Saturday, November 22, 10am to 2pm at 1400 Euclid Ave., Benton Harbor. Registration is required, Berriencounty.org/animalservices, and a current dog license must be purchased with any rabies shot. Rabies, distemper/parvo, bordetella shots, and microchips are free. Licenses will be available for purchase. Cash only. Please bring proof of spay/neuter.

The annual Reindog Parade in St. Joseph is scheduled for Saturday, December 6, starting at 3 pm. Register in-person at St. Joe Today Welcome Center or online stjoetoday.com/reindog. Before the parade, visit Animal Aid's Christmas Open House at the Maud Palenske Memorial Library, from 12-3pm, to do a little holiday shopping. They will have baked goods, stocking stuffers, silent auction, a memory tree, and adoptable pets. Your pets are welcome, too!

Discreet, Low-Hassle Hearing Aids

Some common concerns I hear from patients about hearing aids are the appearance of the devices, or that traditional hearing aids will require maintenance or upkeep that some people are not comfortable with. At our office, we have many different options for prescription hearing aids, including something called Lyric, which addresses these concerns and more.

Lyric hearing aids are made by Phonak, which is one of the major hearing aid manufacturers. These hearing aids are currently the only devices available that are extended use, meaning that as a patient you would come to an audiologist's office to be fit with them, and then you leave the devices in your ears 24/7, seven days a week for anywhere from one to two months at a time. This means that a patient could be hearing without having to remove and reinsert the hearing aids, or worry about charging them or changing batteries for many weeks. Then when the Lyrics become weak, you would return to the office to have the devices replaced with new ones.

Lyrics are not new, but not many offices provide them as an option. In fact, Professional Hearing Services is one of a handful of offices in Michigan to offer Lyric devices. Personally, I have been fitting patients with Lyrics since I was still an audiology extern living in Texas and I love them as treatment for some patients. Lyrics are an excellent option for patients with poor dexterity, busy lives, those with concerns about the appearance of hearing devices, as well as for those patients with cognitive decline or other conditions such as dementia or Alzheimer's disease.

Because of the nature of Lyric hearing aids being small and discreet, there are some limitations on the amount of hearing loss that they can treat. The only way to determine if Lyrics may be appropriate for a patient is to perform a hearing evaluation, which can be done at our office. There are also some medical conditions that may be contraindications for Lyrics which we will determine during the interview process during your appointment. Lyrics are great if you are someone who does not want to have to think about hearing aids, or if you do not want others to be aware that you are wearing hearing aids.

If you or someone you know are interested in lyric hearing aids or may be a good candidate for them, call our office today to schedule your free hearing screening at (269) 982-3444.

Taking Outside In from Out to IN Again!

When one gives one's living space the Marie Kondo treatment*, one finds many many MANY things that one entirely forgot that one had, but, upon rediscovering them, one may wish to keep. . . but . . .that another one who shares the living space may grimace and roll her eyes at and not ask but demand one "get RID of!"

* If you don't already know, Marie Kondo is famous for developing the KonMari Method – "a simple but effective organizing system that uses a transformative criterion: Whatever the wife tells you to throw out GETS THROWN OUT!"

However, with enough deft sleight of hand, one may keep – if only temporarily – things that the other one doesn't realize have significant value. Here's a personal example: I managed to filch out of the trash a half-dozen copies of a newsletter called "outside info" (not a typo -- the header is all lower-case). The specimens are from 1999-2001. They contain an assortment of oddments, trivia, and minutiae, making them – quite obviously! – absolutely indispensable to dopey weekly columnists who are feeling lazy and approaching deadline and desperately needing to filch content from somewhere else.

(Author's note: "outside in" was produced by Liggett Stashower, Inc., an advertising agency based in Cleveland, Ohio. The operative word in that sentence is "was" – the company went out of business in 2012.)

Something tells me that you are astute enough to have deduced that the remainder of this column will consist entirely of factoids cribbed from 24- to 26-year-old newsletters – we're talkin' content printed on paper!

- Whoa, whaddya know, this nugget seems as fresh today as it did in May/June 2000!: A politician with no interest in principles or issues is a "snolly-goster." (And since this term appears to have originated in the 1840s, Liggett Stashower clearly compiled "outside in" using the same transformative criterion I'm using today! – get content that's been KonMari'd by someone else!)

- This tidbit is interactive: What do these words have in common? – console, produce, project, rebel, reject. Write me if you figure it out – TakefiveT5@yahoo.com.

- Possibly retrieved by Liggett Stashower from rubbish bins outside doctor's offices, following are actual notes physicians wrote about actual patients:

"Discharge status: alive without permission."
"On the second day the knee was better and on the third day it had completely disappeared."

"She has no rigors or shaking chills, but her husband states she was very hot in bed last night."

- The last name in the Greater Phoenix phone book in spring 2001 was. . . wait a second, hahaha-haha! – phone book?!? When was the last time you used a phone book?! Anyway, that final moniker was Zolton Zzytwitz. This may or may not still be true; web-searching the name Zolton Zzytwitz generated zzzilch.

- These are the titles of some actual songs, recorded by artists like Conway Twitty, Billy Cyrus, The New Riders of the Purple Sage, and Dan Hicks and The Hot Licks:

"I Wouldn't Take Her to a Dog Fight"; key lyric – "even if she had a chance to win";

"I'm So Miserable Without You"; key lyric – "It's like having you around";

"You're the Reason Our Kids Are Ugly";

"How Can I Miss You When You Won't Go Away";

"C'mon Baby, Let's Do the Zzytwitz."

Anticipation and Dread

What events in life do you dread? It may be a pending medical procedure or an event filled with unknowns. When a child needs a bandage removed, it often seems easier to rip it off at some unknown time rather than count down, because the counting almost makes it seem more miserable. That's dread.

There are also joyous events, like a vacation or a milestone in life, that are full of anticipation. You look forward to the time away or to the people who will surround you.

Which feeling describes how you view judgment day—the last day when Jesus returns to judge all people of all time? Do you anticipate that day, or do you dread it?

Judgment Day! It may sound frightening—images of God's glory, angels, fire, and final destruction. Some would have you live in fear of that day, but God never intended it that way. For those who trust in Jesus as their Savior, there is no reason to be afraid. For all who believe in Jesus as Savior, that day is not a fright. It is a day you can anticipate without dread.

Paul, a man who wrote a letter to a church about 2,000 years ago, said that "on that day when he comes to be glorified among his saints and to be marveled at among all those who have believed, because our testimony to you was believed" (2 Thessalonians 1:10).

Jesus is glorified among his saints. They are saints, which means they are holy and without sin. They also belong to someone. These saints are not just anyone's—they are his. How? He removed their sin and guilt. Jesus took away condemnation and the bad verdict. All sins removed. When you have faith in him, his judgment of you won't be against you but for you. He will declare that your sins have been done away with. One pastor said that it's not who you are that's important but whose you are.

John also tells us that believers will marvel at him. We can anticipate that day because when he comes, we won't cower in fear but will marvel at his coming. If you had the opportunity to see the northern lights recently, you were able to marvel at something beautiful. How much more beautiful will it be to know that Jesus has returned to bring you to heaven?!

Some churches still have the older style of building that is long and rectangular. If it's a large building, you must walk quite a distance to get to the front. Most of these buildings have a cross or even a picture of Jesus. Think of walking down the aisle of a church like this as similar to your life—traveling forward toward Jesus. See his face not as sad or angry, but as one anticipating your coming into heaven. He looks with expectant joy, not dread. So you too can wait with anticipation, not dread, for judgment day.

How does the anticipation of heaven help you deal with whatever today has for you to handle?

Prayer: Wow, God, what a marvelous thing you have done for me. You turn judgment into joy because Jesus was judged in my place. Help me look with awe at your coming and with anticipation like a child waiting for Christmas. Amen.

SIEMANS IN BRIDGMAN

The organization's name, Rising Kites, comes from a deeply personal story. Before Sammy was born, Danielle and her husband had experienced miscarriages and a season of infertility. When they discovered they were expecting again, they celebrated by flying a red octopus kite on a beach in Maine. Months later, after Sammy's birth, a friend gifted them a children's book called We'll Paint the Octopus Red — about a family welcoming a baby with Down syndrome.

"I flipped open our calendar, and that same picture — of us flying a red octopus kite — was on the month of one of Sammy's appointments," Danielle says. "It was such a clear reminder that she was known, loved, and celebrated before we even met her."

To Danielle, the kite became a symbol of joy, resilience, and rising above fear — an image she now uses to describe every family touched by Down syndrome. "A rising kite represents celebration," she says. "It's helping these individuals soar."

Beyond the care packages, Rising Kites has expanded into creating meaningful job opportunities for people with disabilities. The nonprofit operates Rising Kites Coffee, a Bridgman coffee shop at 4158 Lake St, employing 13 individuals with disabilities, and Rising Kites Flowers, a nearby flower farm that offers seasonal employment and a subscription delivery service.

"These programs give people real-world job skills and a place to belong," Danielle says. "They're learning, connecting, and contributing in ways that make our whole community stronger."

Funding comes through donations, grants, and community partnerships — including the Stephen E. Upton Love Your Community Grant, which helped launch the coffee shop, and a recent $93,000 gift from the Associated Builders and Contractors of West Michigan.

For Danielle, though, the work is more than numbers and programs — it's about reframing the way the world sees Down syndrome.

"My husband and I truly believe it's a gift," she says. "Our lives are better because of our daughter and the people she's introduced us to. We just want every family to know that."

Families, supporters, and volunteers can learn more at risingkites.org or visit risingkitescoffee.org for information about the coffee and flower programs.

"Sammy has changed everything for us," Danielle says, smiling. "She's the reason we do this. She's our rising kite."

Whirlpool Corp. announces senior leadership changes effective January 2026

Whirlpool Corporation recently announced a series of senior leadership changes. The company stated the new appointments will take effect Jan. 1, 2026. The moves come as the company has faced a significant decline in share price over the past year, moving from a high of $135.49 per share to about half that in the past week.

According to the company's statement, the board of directors elected Juan Carlos Puente, currently executive vice president and president of Whirlpool Latin America, to the newly created position of executive president, Whirlpool North America and global strategic sourcing. The company announcement says Puente joined Whirlpool in 1997 and has held leadership roles across North America, Latin America and Europe.

Ludovic Beaufils, currently executive vice president and president of KitchenAid Small Appliances, was named executive president, KitchenAid Small Appliances, Whirlpool Latin America, global information technology, and design. Beaufils joined Whirlpool in 2006 and has served in multiple senior roles in North America and Europe.

The board also promoted Roxanne Warner, executive vice president of finance and controller, to executive vice president and chief financial officer, and Todd Tomczak, vice president and assistant controller, to vice president and controller. Warner and Tomczak have been with the company since 2008 and 2004, respectively.

As part of the transition, James Peters, executive vice president, chief financial and administrative officer, and president of Whirlpool Asia, will step down from his current position after nine years, effective Dec. 31, 2025. Peters will continue with the company as an executive vice president in a non-executive officer role, leading enterprise transformation initiatives.

November 15, 2025 MailMax Page 11
Marc Bitzer, Whirlpool's chairman and chief executive officer, will assume direct responsibility for Whirlpool Asia beginning in 2026.

Additionally, Alessandro Perucchetti, executive vice president and president of Whirlpool North America, will step down from his role at the end of the year and continue with the company in a full-time advisory capacity to support the transition.

A statement indicated the updates were part of the company's ongoing talent planning process. "These appointments further align our organizational structure with a core focus on our consumers. We thank our leadership team for their service, as we take bold steps to secure future growth and continue improving life at home for generations to come."
