MR. FRITZ IS A WAGON MAKER

Tumbleweed Smith

"I love turning a piece of wood into something you can appreciate."

Those words were spoken by Brian Fritz who lives in the rural community of Wesley near Brenham. He restores chuck wagons.

"You can get the parts for them pretty easy," says Brian. "Most of the cowboys around here are still beating their own iron out using a forge and a hammer to produce what they need. It's a pretty good challenge to use the old stuff like anvils and tongs, heavy gloves. I have all that stuff too and I like to beat it out."

"I've got a bunch of old wagon parts that I've been collecting and I built this one wagon and put only the best parts on it. I built a wagon for a guy in Utah who told me to build a chuck box on one of his wagons. He's in the movie business."

He makes his wagons so they are totally authentic.

"This wagon that I just completed probably took me sixteen weeks every day building that wagon and it was long days. There's an art to it. Anybody can build something but doing it the correct way takes lots and lots of time."

He has won competitions with his wagons and his chuck wagon cooking.

"We cook chicken fried steak, mashed potatoes, beans, biscuits and cobbler. Cobbler and biscuits are the toughest because you have to put coals under the Dutch oven and on top of it so it's heated up from both sides so it'll cook even from the top and bottom."

Brian has experience working with wood.

"Well, I was a cabinet maker 45 years. I have good tools."

He owns a few wagons.

"I have a Webber, a John Deere, and I have a Triumph built by John Deere. I have a no-name wagon. There were about a thousand wagonmakers in Texas. There was a Studebaker wagon. The company later started making cars. Just like John Deere switched from wagons to tractors. All the old wagon companies had huge facilities and owned their own mules. They had their own woods. They cut hickory for the axles, poplar for the side boards, the floors were all pine. All the iron was built by them. They had lots and lots of tools."

The chuck box carried all the things you might find in a kitchen except the kitchen sink. Cooks got water from a keg attached to the side of the wagon and heated it over a fire to wash dishes.

"Charles Goodnight, the legendary pioneer rancher up in the panhandle is the one that came up with the idea to build a box on the rear of a wagon to hold cooking supplies."

BUSINESS SERVICES

The business services industry is a very broad industry encompassing many different categories of business operations; all of them provide some sort of non-financial service to other companies. These services include advertising, marketing, consultation, logistics (including travel and facilities services), waste handling, staffing services, shipping, administration, and security services to name a few. Nearly every business in operation has need for at least one of the different kinds of service offered by the industry. Marketing companies are responsible for increasing the sales of a client company by helping the company gain new customers as well as keep current ones. Legal services are needed to deal with business transactions, as well as for litigation purposes. Logistics and shipping companies are responsible for connecting businesses to other businesses or consumers by collecting, storing, transporting, and delivering products. Staffing companies match people in need of jobs, temporary or permanent, with companies in need of qualified employees. Leasing companies fill a client's need for certain items without requiring full purchase. Security companies are responsible for keeping a company's assets secure. Consulting companies are in the business of fulfilling needs for expertise that clients cannot fulfill themselves. These companies may offer professional, scientific, or technical consulting, management or strategy consulting, or human resources consulting.

Concierge Nursing Is Changing the Way We Heal

Concierge nursing is quietly reshaping the experience of care in the most human way possible. At a time when the world feels rushed and healthcare often feels distant, this model invites people back into a relationship with their own wellbeing. It offers time, presence, and a true partnership. These qualities used to be common in medicine but have slowly faded as clinics grew crowded and appointments became shorter. Concierge nursing is a response to this shift. It reminds us that healing happens best when a person feels seen.

At its heart, concierge nursing is simple. A nurse chooses to work directly with clients rather than through a traditional clinic or hospital structure. This gives them the freedom to spend real time with people. They can listen without watching the clock. They can explain, guide, monitor, and advocate. They can come to a home, sit with a family, and help them understand what is happening in their bodies and what they can do to feel better. The pace is slower but the impact is deeper.

People often confuse this approach with luxury services. Although it can feel luxurious to have a skilled medical professional arrive at your door, the true value is not indulgence. It is access. It is continuity. It is trust. Many people feel intimidated during medical visits. They forget their questions or feel rushed as soon as the provider enters the room. Concierge nursing removes that tension. Instead of receiving fragmented instructions from multiple departments, clients receive one dedicated expert who knows their history and their preferences. That level of personal attention can transform outcomes.

Nurses who work in this field speak openly about the difference it makes for them as well. Many describe a renewed sense of purpose. They are able to practice the art of nursing the way they imagined when they first entered the profession. They can educate without pressure. They can advocate without limits. They can watch progress unfold in real time and celebrate small victories with their clients. In a system that often leaves clinicians overwhelmed, concierge nursing restores meaning.

Critics sometimes argue that concierge care is only for a select group. Yet the model continues to evolve. Some practices offer creative membership options or short term programs for people who need temporary guidance. Others focus on preventive care so clients can reduce future medical expenses. Accessibility is not a fixed concept. It grows when new models challenge the old ones.

The greatest strength of concierge nursing lies in its humanity. It is not about replacing hospitals or competing with physicians. It is about filling a space that traditional systems struggle to reach. People crave connection.

They want clarity. They want someone who will walk with them through uncertainty.

Nurses have always been the bridge between science and compassion. Concierge nursing simply gives them the room to do that work at full capacity.

As healthcare continues to change, this model stands out as a reminder of something essential. Healing is personal. It requires trust, time, and a caring presence. Concierge nursing brings those qualities back to the center where they belong.
