JOURNAL OF TEXAS' PATH TO INDEPENDENCE continued...

Whether in 4th or 7th-grades in Texas public schools or adults in the working world across the globe, all Texans know that April 21 is San Jacinto Day. Many of us older ones observe it quietly to ourselves, with a small smug smile as we drink our morning coffee or when we mention it offhandedly to a co-worker. Hopefully we text a reminder to our children or grandchildren, no matter their age! Being a Texas is a life-long distinction and point of pride. Remember the time-honored wisdom, "Son, don't ask a man if he's a Texan. If he is, he'll tell you. If he isn't, don't embarrass him". Texans are more often than not passionate, loyal and fiercely independent. You may encounter Texans anywhere you travel, so keep your ears open and your wits about you!

Sam Houston is known as the Hero of San Jacinto. Here's a few interesting points about "old Sam Jacinto", that you might not (or might!) have already known. He rode at the head of his troops and led the attack. As a 43-year-old man, he was in robust physical condition despite his reputation for drinking binges. The horse he rode into battle was one he bought on March 6, 1836, the day of the fall of the Alamo, purchased from another delegate at Washington-on-the-Brazos for 400 Mexican silver dollars. Historical documents state that the horse was a male, was large, fine and handsome and was gray in color. In a 2004 Disney movie depicting the Battle of San Jacinto, he rides a white horse. In a painting of Sam on horseback that hangs in the Sam Houston Museum, he is astride a dark, stocking-legged horse. The horse he had purchased was supposedly named Saracen and was the one he actually rode all spring and into the surprise attack. The horse was shot from under him in the heat of battle. Also shot, Houston was assisted to mount another horse which carried him until the victory was won.

Sam Houston carried a sword. It was a cavalry officer's sword made in Paris, France in 1822. A sword of the same model was used by Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812, and is on display at the Smithsonian. Sam Houston's sword was about a yard long with a curved blade. It had a red Moroccan leather belt and an over-the-shoulder strap and a scabbard. The sword itself is visible in the painting "Surrender of Santa Anna". It leans against the trunk of the oak tree where the injured Sam Houston is resting. Another famous sword, one that Santa Anna relinquished upon his captivity, is also on display at the Sam Houston Memorial Museum at Huntsville, Texas.

Was Sam Houston a military genius or an unwitting hero? Whatever the world may think, he helped decide the fate of Texas. Historians rank the Battle of San Jacinto as the 10th most decisive battle in world history. It led to the Mexican War of 1846-48 which resulted in U.S. acquisition of lands from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific. That territory was larger than the organized area of the U.S. when the Mexican War was fought, and which today represents the states of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah and parts of Wyoming.

These are just a few facts to remember as we observe San Jacinto Day 180 years after the battle. To find out more, why not visit the Sam Houston Memorial Museum, 1402 19th Street in Huntsville, Texas, open to the public daily except Monday, and open every day for school tours.

Now here's something else. In 2016, Sam Houston's influence extends to anyone who loves horses, especially quarter horses. How today's quarter horse industry is linked to the horseman side of our multi-faceted first President will be revealed in next week's article. Meanwhile, I'll watch for you at the corral gate. Honk, yodel or give a whinny as you go by!
