CARDS OF THANKS

My family would like to express our grateful appreciation for everyone's generosity in the support of the Brovold Benefit. Words cannot express our thankfulness. On my family's behalf and mine, I would like to express our heartfelt thanks to the Boars Nest staff, family, and friends for all their time and efforts to make the benefit happen. The benefit was a great success. None of this could have happened without all of you that made it happen. I genuinely appreciate everyone's time, efforts & contributions. We were touched by the generous donations made by all, at the Brovold Benefit. It is the wonderful actions of this community and others that keep us going most days. Once again, a huge thank you in the biggest way, and God bless all. As I always say, if love could be saved Andy he'd still be here. He was loved by many and it has shown in this community we live in. All of the kindness from neighbors, friends, & family will always be remembered. Thank you - Love, Jayme, Trayke, Addalynn, Ihleea & Wylan

By MALCOLM GUNN
 WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

Many mainstream car companies prefer making evolutionary rather than revolutionary adjustments to their more popular models. In Hyundai's case that axiom doesn't apply, as witnessed by the Sonata's significant makeover for 2015.

When the preceding Sonata was launched for the 2011 model year, the stylists took the trendy route, devising (some would call it borrowing) a coupe-like shape along with a boldly shaped grille and headlight treatment as well as a sharp, prominent and swoopy body crease.

Although the Alabama-built sedan has been a hit with buyers, it hasn't come close to knocking off the class-leading Toyota Camry, Honda Accord, Nissan Altima and Ford Fusion.

Physically, the recently arrived seventh-generation Sonata is toned-down and now shares a strong affiliation with the bigger Genesis Sedan. The front end, in particular, is much feet. Similarly down on power, the optional turbocharged 2.0-liter four-cylinder delivers 245 horsepower and 260 pound-feet of torque (previously 274 horsepower and 269 pound-feet). In each case, the front wheels are driven by means of a six-speed automatic transmission with paddle shifters.

Slotted between the two engine choices, and exclusive to the new Sonata Eco model, is a turbocharged 1.6-liter four-cylinder rated at 177 horsepower and 195 pound-feet of torque. It connects to new seven-speed automated manual transmission that promises rapid-fire electronically activated upshifts. The combo also achieves the best fuel-economy rating of the bunch at 28 mpg in the city and 38 on the highway, which bests the 2.4's 25/37 numbers as well as the 2.0 turbo's rating of 23/32.

Note that the gas-electric Sonata Hybrid will skip the 2015 makeover, but will be reissued sometime in calendar year 2015 as a 2016 model.

The drivetrains and updated front and rear suspension pieces are connected to a platform that Hyundai claims is significantly more resistant to twisting and bending. The normal corporate rhetoric is that this aids ride and handling qualities, but in this case it's noticeable. The way it steers and takes the bumps is much improved. It's eye-opening, in fact.

Sonatas equipped with the 2.0-liter turbo come with their own dedicated sport-tuned suspensions and power-steering systems.

The base Sonata SE starts at $22,000 (about a $300 price reduction), including destination charges, and arrives with the usual power and convenience features a rear spoiler and LED running lights.

The Sport gets its own grille and front bumper and added rocker-panel and chrome side moldings, but to move up to 18-inch wheels (16-inchers are standard on base cars and 17s are standard on Sport and Limited) you'll need to order the Sport 2.0T. Both it and the Limited steal the content show with luxury-class amenities such as dual-zone climate control and leather seat coverings.

A panorama sunroof is optional, as are a number of popular electronic safety intervention aids that can help keep passengers safe and the Sonata from receiving unwarranted body blows.

Figuratively speaking, the 2015 Sonata now sings in a lower key and is no longer the solo standout it once was. Even so, it can still hit the sweet notes, even if some of its performance edge has been curtailed in favor of improved fuel efficiency.

Would you prefer your 707 horsepower with two doors or four? To absolutely no one's surprise, Dodge has transplanted all the goodies from the two-door Challenger Hellcat into the new four-door Charger Hellcat (similar platforms), most importantly the 707-horsepower supercharged 6.2-liter "Hemi" V8. Not that you'll ever get the family going this fast, but the Hellcat will supposedly do 204 mph and go from zero to 100 mph and back to zero in less than 13 seconds. Why? It's good press isn't it? Expect it by spring at about $60,000.

Set up the launch control.

Set up the suspension.

2015 DODGE CHARGER HELLCAT

Functional center scoop and adjacent heat extractors.

The only real giveaway that there's 707 horses under the hood.

Specific front/rear LED lighting.

Pirelli tires are 11 inches wide and are fitted to lightweight 20-inch-diameter wheels.

The 15.4-inch Brembo-brand front brakes are shared with the Challenger Hellcat.

Too bad it's not all-wheel-drive, otherwise you wouldn't need a second car for winter.

Different bodywork than normal Chargers.

707 HORSEPOWER, or JUST 500
Most of the supercharged 6.2-liter Hellcat engine is new when compared to the 6.4 in the standard SRT. Black ignition key restricts power to 500. The red key lets out all 707.

OCD MUCH?
Tons of "performance pages" to set up the car for the intended purpose that day.
