Honda S2000: 2000-'09

HISTORY
Honda's first sports car was the tiny 1960s-era S600 micro-roadster that was briefly available in Canada. It would take more than 35 years for the follow-up S2000 to make its global debut, but it copied a similar formula of offering a lightweight package as well as a relatively small-displacement, high-revving powerplant. From 2000-'03, the S2000 ran with a 240-horsepower 2,000-c.c. (2.0-liter) four-cylinder — hence the "2000" designation — that was matched to a six-speed manual gearbox. Employed from 2004 onward was a 2.2-liter engine that was also rated at 240 (later revised to 237) horsepower, but generated peak power at 7,700 rpm instead of the previous engine's 8,300 revs. Following 10 seasons of relatively low-volume sales in this country, the S2000 was retired following the 2009 model year.
