Tulsa Hills, The Walk Maintain Growth

Local Business Opens in Tulsa Hills

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

Since Tulsa Hills began its economic footprint in west Tulsa eight years ago, its local impact continues to increase. The development quickly filled up with big box, national retailers, including Target, Bed, Bath and Beyond, Best Buy, Lowe's, Sam's Club, and Dick's Sporting Goods, thus filling a much-needed gap in services to Tulsa's western portion and its growing number of residents.

As Tulsa Hills moved toward full occupancy, further development was needed, with Parkes Development Group breaking ground on The Walk at Tulsa Hills, just south of Tulsa Hills, in August 2014.

The first retailer to open in the 150,000-square-foot development was Gander Mountain in March. Most recently, Aldi, Chuy's Tex-Mex and Freddy's Frozen Custard & Steakburgers have opened, with Carmike Cinema, Mathis Brothers Sleep Center and a multitenant building are in current planning or construction phases.

However, one thing that is missing from both Tulsa Hills and The Walk are local retailers. Yet, that will change on Black Friday, Nov. 27, when wireless repair store Cell Phone Surgeon opens in Tulsa Hills at 7462 S. Olympia Ave. Cell Phone Surgeon will be one of only a small number of locally-owned businesses in the growing shopping area. This will be the second of three stores that owner Ted Andress will open in the greater Tulsa area.

second location in Tulsa Hills, "it's a booming area that's experiencing exceptional growth," he says. "There's a need for a qualified, reputable cell phone repair company in the Tulsa Hills area to provide this most important service."

Andress also owns four Cox retail stores, with three of them located in Tulsa. Andress is Cox Communication's largest authorized retail dealer in Oklahoma.

It was Andress' experiences with his Cox stores that spurred his idea for Cell Phone Surgeon. "Being in the media and technology business, dealing with all types of wireless technology including cell phones, Internet and home security, we understand that all content is being driven to wireless handheld devices," he says. "That realization drove us into the wireless repair business."

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT: A northern view of The Walk at Tulsa Hills. Since its beginnings in 2007, Tulsa Hills has grown to its full occupancy in west Tulsa, with The Walk at Tulsa Hills, breaking ground in August 2014. Currently, Carmike Cinema, Mathis Brothers Sleep Center and a multitenant building are in current planning or construction phases at The Walk.

Cell Phone Surgeon stores out of are ones that were previously held by RadioShack.

"As soon as I heard that those locations were available, I was ready to make an offer," Andress says. "They are in prime retail areas."

Andress will operate Cell Phone Surgeon with the help of his two sons, Tyler and Teddy, who will serve as the company's district managers.

"We all know the importance we place on our phones; we start to panic if we misplace or break them, but they've become too expensive to replace," says Teddy Andress.

Cell Phone Surgeon offers repair services on cell phones and tablets and will buy, sell or trade, offering top market value compensation. More than 1,000 wireless accessories, such as cases, headphones, and bluetooth devices, will also be available for purchase in the store's showroom.

"Repairs will be done using state-of-the-art diagnostic equipment. We can repair devices with water damage, broken glass, damage to charging ports and cameras, and many other issues," says Tyler Andress.

Additionally, Cell Phone Surgeon will provide a heightened customer-service experience with a lounge area with refreshments and media options for customers waiting on repairs.

"We want to take this industry to a whole new level," says Ted Andress.

He expects to employ up to half-a-dozen employees at the Tulsa Hills location.

Cell Phone Surgeon will hold its grand opening on Dec. 5. Customers can visit the store for free food, giveaways, including a drawing for a flat screen TV, door prizes, and accessory and repair specials.

KUDOS OF THE MONTH: Blue Cross Blue Shield

In November, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Oklahoma (BCBSOK) celebrated 75 years in Oklahoma.

To celebrate the anniversary, BCBSOK gathered historical items to be placed in a time capsule that will be buried on the company's property and opened at its 100th anniversary in 2040.

"Our long history in Oklahoma is not just about insurance—it's about health, community and working together to make Oklahoma stronger," says Ted Haynes, BCBSOK president.

BCBSOK originally began as the Group Hospital Services of Oklahoma and opened its doors on March 15, 1940, in the Tulsa Loan Building in downtown Tulsa. Soon after, they adopted the Blue Cross name and logo. The Blue Shield Companion Plan, initially known as Oklahoma Physician's Services, was established in 1945.

Over the coming years, hospital benefits and medical coverage was expanded and membership soared: the company grew from 13 employees in 1945 to 130 in 1952. Much of the member growth in the 1950s is attributed to the company's Community Enrollment Program that was established in 1953.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield operated for more than 30 years as separate entities with shared management and staff until 1973, when the two merged into Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Oklahoma.

Today, BCBSOK has more than 840,000 members and employs more than 1,100 Oklahomans.

HIGHEST RATING BASED ON PERSONAL EXPERIENCES OF PATIENTS

Recently, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services implemented a new ratings system to help consumers quickly and easily compare hospitals. That system is based on the results of a patient-experience survey referred to as HCAHPS, the Hospital Consumer Assessment of Healthcare Providers and Systems.* Fewer than 10% of hospitals in the country received five stars, the highest rating possible. And Cancer Treatment Centers of America® was one of the only hospitals in Oklahoma to earn that distinction.**

Holiday Activities Unfolding

Various activities relating to the upcoming Christmas holiday season are unfolding throughout greater Tulsa, with Winterfest in downtown Tulsa as an annual highlight. For more information on Winterfest, please see page 5. The following is a brief listing of just a few of the holiday activities throughout greater Tulsa.

The Tulsa Christmas Parade, sponsored by American Waste Control, has been announced for Dec. 12 in downtown Tulsa. Tulsans have come together to celebrate Christmas in a downtown parade for many decades, dating back to at least the 1920s. And, like any great tradition in Tulsa, the Tulsa Christmas Parade features a rich and enduring history.

Today, 80 years later, the Christmas tradition is celebrated once again, coming together with a desire to bring the true spirit of Christmas to annual parade celebration.

In November, Santa Clause announced the Tulsa Christmas Parade in downtown Tulsa Dec. 12. The downtown parade will be combined with the parade previously held in Tulsa Hills shopping center.

Castle Christmas at the Castle of Muskogee and the Garden of Lights at Honor Heights Park are additional local highlights. Castle Christmas is open Thanksgiving Day through New Year's Eve, 6 p.m. - 10 p.m. For more information on Castle Christmas, see page 29.

Christmas trees will be on display in Broken Arrow at Broken Arrow Neighbors through Dec. 12.

ANNA AMERICA

ALAN ARMSTRONG

KEN BUSBY

TERRIE CORRELL

GERARD CLANCY

Since Anna America was voted into office as District 7 City Councilor in November 2014, she has had the focus of improving business growth and public safety in her district.

During 2015, much of her time has also been spent focused on helping to create a renewal package for the expiring Vision 2025 tax that will be brought to Tulsa residents next year.

The City Council's goal is, by the end of the year, to have a package created that will have a combined focus on future city projects, public safety and Arkansas River improvements.

Getting that done will be a significant accomplishment for the council, says America.

America hopes to see two of her proposals included in the Vision renewal package that would have a direct impact on her district as well as the city: a citywide assessment of aging retail areas throughout the city in order to generate additional future sales tax; and, two, the widening of Mingo Road between 71st and 91st streets: "the council agrees this needs to be done," she says. "The widening will be important for economic development and traffic control."

This has been a busy year for Alan Armstrong, president and CEO of Williams. A highlight during his Chamber leadership year has been the opening of the Macy's Distribution Center in Owasso, which was procured with a strong synergistic regional effort.

In addition to his chairmanship of the Tulsa Regional Chamber, Armstrong has been in the spotlight in his leadership role at Williams. Earlier this year Williams completed the acquisition of Access Midstream, headquartered in Oklahoma City.

This fall Williams was targeted by Energy Transfer Equity (ETE) of Dallas for a merger in a deal valued at $37.7 million, according to the Oil and Gas Journal, which quotes Armstrong: "As a combined company, we will have enhanced prospects for growth, be better able to connect our customers to more diverse markets, and have more stability in an environment of low commodity prices. Importantly, Williams Partners will retain its current name and remain a publicly traded partnership headquartered in Tulsa, Okla."

In December 2014, Ken Busby announced that he would leave his role as executive director with the Arts & Humanities Council of Tulsa. In May, he was announced as the executive director of the Route 66 Alliance.

Busby will oversee the creation of the Route 66 Alliance Interpretive Center, a 44,000-square-foot facility that will highlight the Mother Road, her stories and how Tulsa has played such a large role in her history.

"When I saw the preliminary designs for the building, I thought, 'Yes, I need to be involved,'" he says. "This center will be great for the state, great for Tulsa, tourism and economic development. We can use this center to get people off the Interstate and then showcase the rest of Tulsa."

The fundraising campaign for the center, which began in June, is currently on track, says Busby. Several companies and individuals have made pledges. The fundraising goal is $19.5 million.

Busby expects a September 2016 groundbreaking, followed by two years of construction, with a planned opening in September 2018.

Tulsa Zoo President and CEO Terrie Correll continues to work with zoo officials and the community to bring additional progress and visitors to the Tulsa Zoo.

For fiscal year 2014-15, the zoo reported its second-highest attendance year on record.

In 2014, the Mary K. Chapman Rhino Reserve was the first exhibit from the zoo's 20-year master plan to open.

Following that was the groundbreaking for the Lost Kingdom Exhibit Complex, which is planned to open in 2017. "Lost Kingdom is another example of our master plan progress and is a game-changer for the zoo, in terms of animal habitat quality and guest experience," says Correll.

Lost Kingdom will feature Komodo dragons and Asian big cats, including tigers and snow leopards.

Other projects in the zoo's phase I plans include the Carnivores! exhibit, featuring a new habitat for African lions; renovations of the giraffe exhibit; and a revamped and expanded chimpanzee exhibit.

Dr. Gerard Clancy entered 2015 as the vice president and dean of the College of Health Sciences at the University of Tulsa. Previously, Clancy served as president of OU-Tulsa beginning in 2006. In 2011, while at OU-Tulsa, Clancy announced plans to collaborate with TU in the creation of a four-year community medicine educational program in Tulsa.

Clancy has continued to work hard for the collaborative program with OU-Tulsa, and the recent opening of the $6.4 million Tandy Education Center at the OU-Tulsa Schusterman Center, 4502 E. 41st Street, has solidified that goal.

This fall, the inaugural class of first-year students from the OU-TU School of Community Medicine began their studies at OU-Tulsa, where they will complete all four years of their medical education. OU College of Medicine faculty in Oklahoma City and Tulsa as well as TU faculty are teaching the students and utilizing the Tandy Education Center.

Watch for Dr. Gerard Clancy to continue his leadership throughout the community in the future.

FRANK HAITH

Frank Haith finished his first season as the head coach of the University of Tulsa men's basketball team last March with a winning record. The Golden Hurricane, members of the American Athletic Conference, finished the season 23-11, 14-4 in American Athletic play to finish in second place. They advanced to the semifinals of the American Athletic Tournament where they lost to Connecticut. They were invited to the National Invitation Tournament where they defeated William & Mary in the first round before losing in the second round to Murray State.

Haith inherited an experienced team last year, and in this 2015-2016 season they are one of the most experienced teams in the nation. That experience has paid off early in the season, as Tulsa upset Wichita State, ranked ninth in the nation. It was the highest ranked team Tulsa has ever defeated in the Reynolds Center.

Haith came to TU from the University of Missouri, where he was also the head coach.

JOHN SCHUMANN

Beginning Jan. 1, 2015, Dr. John Schumann became interim president of the University of Oklahoma-Tulsa. On Sept. 16, Schumann was officially appointed as president of OU-Tulsa by the OU Board of Regents.

Since becoming president, Schumann has seen the recent opening of the state-of-the-art Tandy Education Center, a $6.4-million simulation and education center and the inaugural class of first-year medical students. Students can now complete all four years of their medical education at OU-Tulsa.

Recently, Schumann presided over his first OU-Tulsa convocation as president, with more than 400 graduates from 18 programs, and he traveled to Israel in May with OU social work students and officially established Haruv USA at OU-Tulsa, a collaboration with the Haruv Institute at Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

He continues to author a weekly blog and has written for several national media including Slate, the Atlantic, and NPR's blog, Shots. Schumann also hosts Medical Matters on KWGS 89.5 FM.

PHILIP MONTGOMERY

As of this writing, Philip Montgomery's first season as the head football coach of the University of Tulsa has been successful in that the team has a possibility of playing in a bowl game for the first time since 2012. Tulsa has won games over Florida Atlantic, New Mexico, Louisiana-Monroe, SMU and Central Florida, while losing to Oklahoma, Houston, East Carolina, Memphis and Cincinnati, all very good teams.

A highlight this season was when Tulsa scored two touchdowns in 12 seconds right before halftime at Oklahoma. This may be a prelude to what is in store in the future, as Montgomery has time to recruit his own players into what many know as the "Baylor offense," his last coaching assignment before coming to Tulsa.

While at Baylor, Montgomery was honored many times, including as Offensive Coordinator of the Year by FootballScoop.com and was named a finalist for the Broyles Award as the nation's top assistant.

LEIGH GOODSON

Since becoming president and CEO of Tulsa Community College in July 2014, Leigh B. Goodson has led the application into the national education initiative Pathways Project. TCC was one of the 30 community colleges across the country selected. The Pathways Project focuses on raising college graduation rates by building better bridges for students from high school graduation to college completion.

Goodson also led the way in the college's development of its 2016-2020 Strategic Plan, which was developed and approved after a collaborative process involving TCC faculty and staff.

Goodson has also created positions of Vice President for Workforce Development and Associate Vice President for Institutional Effectiveness through internal reallocation to address critical, underdeveloped college functions, implemented a baseline budgeting model, and has initiated "Open Lines," which are campus forums to share updates on critical issues and address any questions or concerns expressed by faculty and staff.

EVAN TIPTON

Evan Tipton was the 2015 chairman of TYPros. Tipton is producing manager for the Scott McCoy Insurance Agency, and in November, he was inducted into Oklahoma State University's Spears School of Business Hall of Fame.

In May, TYPros held another successful StreetCred event, this one at 61st Street and Peoria Avenue, which focused on beautification, safety, and community involvement with family-friendly activities, games and entertainment.

While people often perceive TYPros to be focused mainly on midtown and downtown Tulsa, this event helped to show that the organization is inclusive, which was one of Tipton's goals as 2015 chair.

TYPros Foundation was announced in October 2014, with the goal of connecting young professionals with the organizations, funding and support for their ideas.

In August, the foundation awarded a total of $28,000 to seven local projects or organizations.

Tulsa's Great Raft Race received the largest grant of $10,000.

Eighth Annual Arvest Winterfest Returns to Tulsa

The time has come to bundle up and enjoy the magical spirit of the holidays as Tulsa's favorite holiday celebration returns to the streets of downtown Tulsa. The Eighth Annual Arvest Winterfest presented with Fabwell returns the day after Thanksgiving.

"Winterfest has become the kick-off for the holidays in downtown Tulsa," says Jeff Nickler, SMG Tulsa general manager. "As Tulsa's largest holiday tradition, we are excited to welcome our guests to enjoy the custom ice skating rink, holiday concessions and the beautiful display of lights."

In seven years, attendance for this event has soared from 35,000 visitors in 2008 to more than 150,000 in 2014. The seasonal celebration is open to the public for 52 days again this year. The extended season guarantees everyone a chance to enjoy skating beneath Tulsa's skyline while watching free entertainment at the outdoor stage and taking in the beautiful, gleaming holiday lights.

The 9,000 square-foot outdoor ice rink is open daily from Nov. 27 through Jan. 17, 2016 (including Christmas Day). A climate-controlled warming tent and delicious seasonal concessions are available for purchase to visitors looking to keep warm.

Just steps from the rink will be Oklahoma's tallest Christmas Tree. The massive 44-foot tree features 35,700 glowing lights, 109,534 individual tips and a diameter at the base of nearly 30 feet. The beautiful lights provide an ideal backdrop for holiday photographs under the Tulsa skyline.

Free entertainment every Saturday until Christmas will take place on the outdoor stage adjacent to the rink beside the glass icon wall of the BOK Center. Performances will feature children from area churches, schools, nonprofit organizations and choral groups.

A variety of weekly promotions are scheduled during the festival. Every Monday, patrons receive half-price admission for skating with the donation of a non-perishable can of food to the Community Food Bank of Eastern Oklahoma, presented by OakTree IT Staffing. Every Wednesday throughout the festival, visitors receive half-price admission for skating with the donation of a new or gently used coat, blanket, scarf or pair of gloves, presented by Catalyst Benefits Group. These donations benefit Night Light Tulsa.

As part of GLOW, Winterfest has teamed up with the Downtown Coordinating Council to bring the best of the holidays to downtown Tulsa. Guthrie Green, Winterfest, the Deco District, Reconciliation Park, East Village and Greenwood are all participating in a tour of lighting ceremonies Nov. 29. "Light the Loop! A Progressive Lighting" presents a day full of holiday activities throughout downtown Tulsa.

On Dec. 12, as Winterfest will host the Jingle Bell Run benefiting the Arthritis Foundation. The day also includes live entertainment, the Cheyenne Bus Toy Drive benefiting Family & Children Services, and Breakfast with Santa returns for its third year.

Breakfast with Santa takes place on Dec. 12 including a delicious breakfast, visits with Santa and more for the whole family. Admission is $8 per person, and reservations are required. Visit www.tulsawinterfest.com to place a reservation. Breakfast with Santa is presented by BlueStone Natural Resources.

Tulsa Participates in 100 Resilient Cities Summit

Last December, Tulsa began its quest to become a resilient city and was accepted into the second round of the Rockefeller Foundation's Challenge. As part of this elite group, we have the opportunity to share how our city has reacted to past storms and flooding, as well as to identify our resources, the plans we already have in place and the gaps we have to fill.

COMMENTARY BY MAYOR DEWEY F. BARTLETT, JR

The City of Tulsa has always looked to help our neighbors in need. A great way to highlight our experience as a resilient city was with our crisis management efforts during the Moore and Joplin tornadoes, which immensely interested the Rockefeller Foundation.

In October, I had the opportunity to travel overseas to attend the Rockefeller Foundation's 100 Resilient Cities Leaders' Summit in Bellagio, Italy. As mayor of Tulsa, I was joined by four other U.S. mayors from Berkeley and Oakland, Calif., Boulder, Colo., and New Orleans, La., along with 29 other mayors throughout the world. We collectively shared our experiences and knowledge and collaborated on implementing innovative solutions for natural disasters and social/economic issues.

I now have a better idea of the scope involved in being a resilient city. The Rockefeller Foundation wants us to be more involved in water-related issues, but our role is still being defined. As soon as it's solidified, I'm confident of Tulsa's remarkable opportunity to play on the world stage and serve as a regional leader among cities.

Some of the challenges our city faces here include the economy, public safety and infrastructure needs. Right now, sales tax is our city's only source of revenue, which makes it difficult meeting basic needs for next year's fiscal budget. However, with the support of the Oklahoma Municipal League and Oklahoma City Mayor Mick Cornett, we're looking at ways to diversify our revenues without raising taxes.

We've already begun Tulsa's first engagement in its partnership with 100 Resilient Cities (100RC). In September, we held a workshop for a diverse set of stakeholders from across city government, private sector, nonprofit, academia and civic groups to identify the city's resilience challenges. We set a blueprint for engaging partners across sectors to equip Tulsa with the tools and resources needed to be more resilient.

As part of the 100RC, Tulsa will receive four types of support, including 1) Funding to hire a Chief Resilience Officer (CRO), 2) Assistance in developing a resilience strategy, 3) Access to a platform of resilience tools/service-es to help design and implement our strategy, and 4) Membership in the 100 Resilient Cities Network.

I'm extremely pleased that Tulsa is a part of the 100RC. It will help us be proactive rather than reactive in dealing with the physical, social and economic challenges we face in the 21st century.

Tulsa Area United Way Reaches Record Goal

The Tulsa Area United Way recently unveiled the results of its annual campaign, raising $26,524,575 for the community.

The total was beyond its original goal of $26,524,500, the largest in its 91-year history.

The results were announced before more than 300 guests at the annual "Unite!" celebration, held at the Helmerich Center for American Research at Gilcrease Museum.

"Tulsans refused to allow a challenging economy stand in the way of ensuring their friends and neighbors receive the services they need," says Mark R. Graham, president and CEO of the Tulsa Area United Way. "We once again demonstrated why Tulsa is known as one of the nation's most giving communities."

Nonprofit organizations, including the Tulsa Area United Way's 60 partner agencies, surpassed the $1 million threshold for the first time, helping the local United Way to lead its peers nationally in giving by nonprofit organizations.

"This campaign was truly an example of all of us coming together for the greater good," says Ted Haynes, 2015 campaign chair and president and CEO of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Oklahoma. "More than 44,000 individuals supported the campaign, in addition to generous companies, foundations and small businesses."

The campaign was energized by major challenge grants which provided dollar-for-dollar matching opportunities for many contributors, including small and medium-sized businesses, individuals who give at a leadership level of $500 or more annually, and members of the United Way's Emerging Leaders Society and Women's Leadership Council. The challenge grants were issued by several local individuals, foundations, and corporations.

"Our annual United Way campaign is a volunteer-driven endeavor, led by the 50 members of our Campaign Cabinet, 25 loaned executives and hundreds of other volunteers," says Laura Hailey, senior vice president of resource development.

Funding for the Tulsa Area United Way's partner agencies as a result of this year's campaign will begin in January.

Top company and organizational supporters will be recognized at the Tulsa Area United Way's annual Live United Awards and Luncheon on Feb. 16 at the Cox Business Center.

The Tulsa Area United Way serves more than 500,000 people each year through its 60 partner agencies and several community-wide collaborative programs, in the areas of education, health and safety, and financial stability.

MET Awards: An Honor to Serve, A Thrill to be Recognized

You are now reading an award-winning column! The Metropolitan Environmental Trust, better known as The MET, held its 2015 America Recycles Day Banquet, honoring those in our community working towards environmental awareness and change. I am humbled to tell you they honored me as Recycling Reporter. I am among quite great company. Let me introduce you to the four winners in other categories:

The MET awarded Dr. Katharine Anderson with the Green Event trophy. Dr. Anderson's volunteerism created 2015 Tulsa Earth Day: Celebrate COMMUNITY. This annual event brings together more than 35 companies with approximately 1,000 students from Lee Elementary in the Tulsa school district, to inspire an environmental stewardship in these leaders of tomorrow.

The Green School award went to Peters Elementary in the Union school district. With the help of teachers Kathy Harding and Emmet Bowen, students at Peters earned their Oklahoma Green Schools flag in 2013, and have presented at the OGSC conference ever since.

These students are dedicated stewards of the environment, so much so that at least one former student continues to volunteer summer hours to keep green projects thriving while school is out of session.

The MET awarded Miller Environmental Transfer as this year's recycling entrepreneur. An affiliate of Miller Trucking, the company launched in December 2013 with the ambition to help their clients shift disposal methods away from traditional landfill avenues and toward recycling with an ultimate goal of zero-landfill usage. Miller Environmental Transfer is dominating the market thanks to its dedication to solid environmental practices.

The 2015 Lifetime Recycling Achievement award went to The MET's former executive director, Michael Patton. He began on this journey at age eleven by organizing a litter clean-up at McClure Park on the nation's first Earth Day in 1970.

In the 1980s, Patton organized the first phone book recycling event, became the state's first recycling coordinator in the 1990s, spearheaded the first household pollutant collection event in 1994 and established the Enviro Expo, bringing "green-minded" businesses and organizations together in Tulsa.

Patton now serves as Executive Director of Land Legacy, a nonprofit conservation organization whose mission is to conserve, enhance, and restore urban and rural lands and waters.

As you can read, I am in some pretty amazing company and could not be here without GTR Newspapers' dedication to giving space to sustainability each month and the incredible team making it happen. Also, it wouldn't be possible without you, the reader, who takes this journey with me, and adds to the story with your own sustainable interests and goals. Thank you.

Trash Talk

By BETH TURNER
Tulsa Master Recyclers Association

As a follower of Trash Talk, you know we've been taking a look at the crazy things around our house that we know should recycle, but aren't easy to figure out. We will continue that segment next month but in light of the holiday shopping season bearing down on us, here are a few ideas for green gift-giving. Full disclosure - a few of these ideas I am recycling from the award-winning Michael Patton:

1. A bicycle basket: Bicycling offers great exercise, it can also be a means to get your errands accomplished while avoiding congested traffic and find a parking space. Most of my weekend chores involve the bank and a few grocery stores, all of which are fairly close to my house.

Sometimes I've thought it'd be quicker to jump in the car to "run get something." But what I've found is the bike is the faster tool for travel and has the added benefit of letting me relax along the way vs. letting my road rage get the best of me. Added bonus: there are some great, local bike shops in town such as Lee's or Tom's. If you hate your bike, it could be your seat. While there, have them fit your fanny to a seat that's right for you.

2. Solar, portable battery pack: Conserve energy while you charge your beloved devices. While you're at it, take a moment to marvel at modern advances. Today's smartphone is so much more than a one-use product. I have my phone, email, texting, driving directions, games, videos, photos, music and books all in one device that I can charge in a few short hours, and thanks again to modern technology and about $20 bucks, the sun will charge it for me. If you know of a local business that sells a solar charger, please let me know. Right now, my best advice is Amazon.com.

3. A nice water bottle/coffee cup combo: We all know we should bring along our own drinking container. But if it's not cool, you aren't going to want to tout it. Every reach of my beloved reusable coffee cup and water bottle fill me with happiness. (It really is the small things sometimes). Back in my sports days, my water bottle was covered in stickers of my favorite bands and brands. These days, I splurged a little more for a classier style that feels worthy of a boardroom meeting. My preferred containers contain no BPA, so I lean towards glass and ceramic styles that are wrapped in a break-proof netting that mimics my smart phone casing. This just might be an eco-gal's favorite way to accessorize, by the way.

4. The gift of experience: Our family recently lost one of our own, and as it tradition, we all came together and reminisced. What I took away with me that day is how important our experiences have been to each other. As I look to the holiday season, I also recognize that the children in our family are all now young adults. So, these two moments make me realize that it's the memories we create, not the gifts we give that mean so much to all of us in the long run. What we need is time together, things experienced, memories made. We are also lucky enough to live in Tulsa - a town full of opportunities for enriching activities, from museums to live music to stellar restaurants to performance plays and musicals to the zoo to hiking trails and beautiful parks to waterfalls and cabins for rent along Oklahoma's prairie. The tradition I always want to hold dear is the love of family that makes our community great.

Thank you, again, for making this article award winning, Readers. Since this column began nearly six years ago, it's always been with the intention of recognizing that it takes thought, planning and care to live a more sustainable lifestyle, so it's always good to know you're not alone. But I have found that in life, fighting the good fight for our journey brings its own rewards. I am so happy to share this reward with you.

May your holiday travels bring you joy and safely back home again. We will pick up our hunt for recycling those odd items around our houses next month. Until then, please send in your favorite eco-gifting ideas, advice and tips to bethturner@me.com, and follow the conversation @TrashTalkTulsa.

Holiday Events Highlight December at the PAC

In the aftermath of the Paris attacks, and multiple other terrorist acts, the world seems dislodged, and many feel frightened. It is difficult to promote a fun business at times like this, but, to some extent, that "business as usual" is what we need. Certainly, we can always find solace, inspiration and diversion in the arts.

December at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center is shiny and bright with warm and merry entertainment - each event brimming with music. Beginning Dec. 2, Tulsa's only auditioned hand bell choir group, The Tulsa Festival Ringers, appears again on the Williams Theatre set of "A Christmas Carol" at 11:30 a.m. and 12:45 p.m., ringing in December with the sounds of the season. Presented by the PAC Trust, these Brown Bag It performances are free, and audience members can bring a lunch to enjoy along with "The Little Drummer Boy" and "Frosty the Snowman."

December also features events that are not necessarily holiday-themed, but have the dream-like enchantment that we associate with the season. Theatre Tulsa's Family series presents a condensed musical version of Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Cinderella" that is well suited to a younger audience and with a plot that highlights important lessons for children. Local students from Theatre Tulsa's Broadway Bootcamp perform Dec. 4-13.

Tulsa Symphony, joined by the Tulsa Oratorio Chorus and 200 local high school children, blend their talents for two "Home for the Holidays" concerts. The Dec. 5 concert is in the evening, and the Dec. 6 performance is an afternoon matinee. This is a Pops series sing-along that will be a fun outing for everyone. Tulsa Symphony has been offering a ride-sharing program and childcare for its PAC events. Contact the Symphony for details.

I've probably seen American Theatre Company's "A Christmas Carol" more than a dozen times, but I always leave a performance feeling less put upon by holiday stress and ready to spread some cheer. Part of its appeal is the fabulous revolving set that captures the look and mood of Victorian England. I appreciate how well Dickens' ghost story is conveyed in this production, and the music gives me a lift. And then there is Karl Krause, the actor who plays Ebenezer Scrooge. I don't know how many more years Karl will continue in the role. You would not want to miss this quintessential Scrooge - he's just the best. The musical runs in Williams Theatre from Dec. 10 all the way through Dec. 23.

Our other long-standing holiday show, Dec. 11-20, is Tulsa Ballet's "The Nutcracker." I saw it again last year and was so glad I did. It is sparkly and elegant, and the dancing is exceptional. You get all that glitz, glamour and superb dancing, along with Tulsa Symphony in the pit performing Tchaikovsky's score! Local children appear as mice and toy soldiers, making the production even more precious. And, this production, choreographed by Marcello Angelini, is set in Paris and Versailles - making it extra meaningful this year.

"Dreamgirls" is not a holiday tradition, but it will be a different and enjoyable holiday-time diversion. The story is about small-town girls with outsized dreams who try to sing their way to stardom. Beyoncé, Jennifer Hudson and Annika Noni Rose were the Dreamettes in the film, which also starred Eddie Murphy. Staged by Spinning Plates Productions Dec. 17-23, "Dreamgirls in Concert" features the entire script sung in a concert setting starring Dionne White, LaToya Tillis, Briana Wright, Roderick Hudson and Nash Wayne McQuarters.

Wrapping the month in a big, dazzling bow is another musical that has all the elements of a fairy tale - Disney's "The Beauty and the Beast." This is a touring Broadway musical, presented by Celebrity Attractions, Dec. 22-23. Lavish costumes and sets and characters like Lumiere and Gaston, along with Belle and the Beast, all contribute to a spectacular, enchanting theatre experience. We hope to see you at several December events. Please pick up a brochure in our lobby racks and begin planning your 2016 entertainment. As 2015 closes, we thank you for supporting the arts and the Tulsa Performing Arts Center in the past year and wish you much love and a world at peace in the year ahead.

WINTER NIGHT: The Lamplighter lights the street lamps in American Theatre Company's "A Christmas Carol" at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center, Dec. 10-23.

By BLAKE AUSTYN
Contributing Writer

The holidays are upon us, as are all of the events, music and festivities that come with them.

"A Christmas Carol" makes its splendid return to the Tulsa Performing Arts Center Dec. 10-13, 16-20, 21-23.

Claudia Sanders, director of this year's "A Christmas Carol," recently spoke about what she anticipates most about this annual holiday production.

Greater Tulsa Reporter: How many years have you directed Tulsa's "A Christmas Carol?"

Claudia Sanders: This will be the fourth year I've directed the American Theatre Company production. The last time I directed was in 1997, when we opened the show for three performances at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center and then moved it for an extended run at The Brady Theatre.

GTR: What do you enjoy about directing this production?

CS: Working with the cast is the first on a long list of things that I enjoy. The music is delightful and memorable. The set is amazing. The lighting, the snow and the energy surrounding the entire production are all thrilling. And the story stirs up so many emotions. It's fun to play with.

Also, this show has an established tradition of seeing families year after year either as performers or crew members for the show. We have at least three families returning this year, and they've done so for several years. It's their own family tradition, and it's gratifying to see them having such fun!

And there's something else. "A Christmas Carol" is a great show for young and old, who want to be in a play, to get their feet wet. To see some go from timid and shy to confident and strong, and making new friends, is rewarding beyond measure. We form lifelong friendships here.

GTR: Why did you return to direct this year?

CS: Simply put, to have fun. The "behind the scenes" folks - the Technical Director, Music Director, Choreographer, Stage Manager, Lighting, Sound, Costumer, backstage crew have all worked this show at least a couple of times and in most cases have worked it many times. So I just get to have fun.

from the show?

CS: Wonderful music, a lavish set and costumes, and a talented cast of just under 50, supported by a crew of approximately 25. It's magic!

GTR: What do you think audience members will most enjoy about the show?

CS: The sights and the sounds! Perhaps the ghosts. Or the wonderfully talented cast.

GTR: If individuals have seen the show in years past, why should they return again this season?

CS: It's a delightful family show. It's become a holiday tradition in Tulsa and is now in its 39th year. We also have many cast members returning this year to play different roles from previous years. And then there's Karl Krause, the man who plays Ebenezer Scrooge. Enough said!

White Flag Reopens with Improved Offerings

LOCAL DINING

By BLAKE AUSTYN
Contributing Writer

White Flag Pub & Grub, 116 S. Elgin Ave., in downtown Tulsa, reopened in October in response to an immediate need.

"I wanted to give my employees at Joe Momma's Pizza a place to work," says restaurant Owner Blake Ewing.

Construction will begin by the end of the year on Joe Momma's after a fire in July, he says.

White Flag's road has been a bit rocky since first opening near the end of 2013.

"Previously, we had never gotten the consistency and quality right for White Flag," Ewing says.

Around the end of 2014, White Flag transitioned into a special event venue.

When Ewing decided to reopen White Flag, he brought with it a diversified menu.

Instead of a menu focused mainly on burgers, this time around, White Flag's menu includes other items like wings, hot melts and more interesting daily specials: "each day, an employee determines a special," he says. "They've come up with some cool things."

A friend and I decided to try out the new menu on a recent weekday evening.

We started with the White

Cheddar Curds for an appetizer. The menu's other options are basic appetizer fare but sound appealing. I was curious about the Jalapeño Poppers, stuffed with cream cheese and sausage and wrapped in bacon, which our waiter said are great but also spicy, and the Spinach Artichoke Dip is another popular dish, he said.

The curds sounded in their description like a fancy way of saying cheese sticks; however, their description termed them "lightly battered," which is not something that traditional cheese sticks are known for. So I was interested in how they would taste.

I was pleased to find that they were, in fact, lightly breaded, which allowed the cheese flavor to take center stage. They came with marinara sauce or ranch dressing, upon request.

My tablemate ordered the Turkey Spinach Artichoke sandwich, which we were told was a popular item, and for good reason. The sandwich is moist, and the flavor combination of smoked turkey, spinach artichoke dip, tomatoes and red onions gives the sandwich a bright taste.

All sandwiches and burgers come with a choice of a side order.

My friend ordered the Beer Battered Fries, which were medium crispy but didn't taste particularly different from the typical fry.

BLAKE AUSTYN for GTR Newspapers

DIVERSIFIED MENU: White Flag Pub & Grub, 116 S. Elgin Ave., in downtown Tulsa, reopened in October after a July fire at restaurant owner Blake Ewing's Joe Momma's Pizza. White Flag originally opened near the end of 2013 and transitioned to a special event venue a year later. The revamped White Flag menu is more diversified than it was previously, with options including wings, hot melts and daily specials.

I chose to go for the Italian Pesto Melt for my meal, which on the menu is a vegetarian item, but our waiter suggested adding sliced turkey to give it added flavor and thickness. Otherwise, the sandwich comes with pesto, basil, tomatoes and three kinds of cheeses.

While I think the Artichoke Spinach Sandwich stole my heart, this sandwich was a close second, because I love pesto, which is important in liking this dish.

There is a lot of pesto.

For my side order, I chose the Mac & Cheese, which was creamy as macaroni and cheese should be, but I could have used a bit more seasoning on it.

Other side order options are French Fries, Onion Rings and Soup.

For dessert, we sprung for The Orpheum: a chocolate chip cookie, baked fresh to order, which takes about 10 minutes, and is served in a skillet, topped with vanilla ice cream, chocolate sauce and whipped cream.

It was surprisingly light and a nice finisher to our meal.

White Flag is one of the few late-night options available downtown during the week. It is open Monday-Thursday 11 a.m.-midnight and Friday-Saturday 11 a.m.-2 a.m.

Tulsans' Bow Ties Earn 'Shark' Investment

Tulsa is quickly becoming a thriving incubator for entrepreneurs. And the word is spreading, both locally and nationally.

Forbes recently named Tulsa the No. 1 Best City for Young Entrepreneurs.

MBACentral.org named Tulsa the 39th most Entrepreneur Friendly City.

In January, local food truck Lone Wolf Banh Mi was featured on CNBC's Restaurant Startup.

In October, bringing Tulsa back again into the spotlight was Adam Teague and Tim Paslay, owners of Two Guys Bow Ties, who appeared on ABC's Shark Tank.

Teague and Paslay launched their wooden bow tie and accessory company in 2012. They met through their involvement with the Fab Lab. "We're both tinkerers," says Teague.

Paslay, a woodworker with a background in prop building and set design, came up with the idea to make wooden bow ties: "I wanted to have something to wear that shows people what I do (woodworking)," he says.

He made one for himself, which he wore to a wedding, and got positive responses from friends.

However, Paslay knew that if he wanted to turn this idea into profit, he needed a business-minded partner.

Teague's business background with entrepreneurial and e-commerce experience meshed well with Paslay's strengths.

"I've got good business sense," says Teague, who describes himself as a "serial entrepreneur."

Teague focused the young company on order delivery speed, customer service and additional website needs.

In December 2012, Teague and Paslay's bow ties were featured on uncrate.com, causing both a surge in orders and quite a few late nights for the team during that holiday season.

"We figured that if we survived holiday 2012, we could do anything," says Teague.

"That experience showed us that we had something here and that we could do this," Paslay says.

The company continued to grow from there. And Teague and Paslay continued to innovate and add products, including lapels and pocket squares.

In May 2014, Mike Conley of the Memphis Grizzlies was photographed wearing a Two Guys Bow Tie.

By early 2015, the partners were experimenting with creating wooden fedoras and made sure to send one to Conley.

Then, in April, they received a text from a friend in Oklahoma City who heard about a casting call for Shark Tank.

"People were always saying that we should do Shark Tank," says Teague.

In fact, the partners could have tried out for Shark Tank in 2013, when they were in Texas, attending South by Southwest.

"But, for where our business was at, it was too early," Teague says.

While the second opportunity in April came at a hectic time for Teague and Paslay – they were in the middle of moving shop locations and adding equipment – they saw their opportunity and knew they were ready.

On the morning of the audition, Teague arrived at 5 a.m. to secure a place in line. They were 49th in the door.

Once they began their pitch, it wasn't until Teague and Paslay mentioned their wooden fedoras that the woman who they were pitching to began to take notice, says Paslay.

"She put down her cell phone and started asking questions," he remembers.

After their initial pitch, everything moved

at top speed so they could be ready by June to tape for an episode where Troy Carter, founder and CEO of entertainment management company Atom Factory, would be serving as a guest Shark.

"I think they wanted us to be on the show when Troy would be a guest because our brand fits with his interests," says Teague.

However, while at one point in the deal it looked like Carter and FUBU Founder and CEO Daymond John were going to partner in a deal with Teague and Paslay, Carter ended up passing, and Teague and Paslay got what they had initially been aiming for: a partnership with John. Teague and Paslay made a deal to receive $150,000 with 17.5 percent of the company going to John.

"Our game plan was to get Daymond," says Paslay. "He has gone through the whole business life cycle."

While some business owners shirk at giving up a sizable portion of their company to an investor, "we believe in partnerships," Paslay says.

"The concept of having someone who is so much bigger will be helpful to us," says Teague.

Since appearing on Shark Tank, the partners have definitely noticed an uptick in online orders and interest in their products.

"They tell us that being on Shark Tank is equivalent to $10 million of exposure in advertising," says Paslay.

Teague and Paslay are also enjoying a local following.

On Oct. 24, they held a grand opening for their retail store in the Pearl District, at 623 S. Peoria Ave.

"It's cool to have people come into the store and say that they heard about us on Shark Tank," says Paslay.

As for the future, "our end game is innovation and staying ahead of the trends and continuing to create new, original ideas," he continues.

Coming soon: cufflinks, says Paslay.

After that? For these creatives, something tells me the sky's the limit.

GOING UP: The new corporate headquarters for TTCU The Credit Union is well underway at 9815 E. 81st St. in Tulsa, next to the TTCU Southeast branch. Expected completion is late 2016 for the six-story, 90,000-square-foot facility. Ground was broken on June 25, and officials say that the new headquarters will enable the TTCU team to provide even greater levels of service to the existing membership and to expand membership in years to come.

State-of-the-Art Tandy Education Center Opens

The $6.4-million Tandy Education Center was officially dedicated at the University of Oklahoma-Tulsa Schusterman Center, 4502 E. 41st St., on Nov. 3.

The 16,000-square-foot Tandy Education Center features the latest advances in medical simulation and a training and feedback method in which students practice in lifelike circumstances using models or virtual reality. The center includes 10 exam rooms, two inpatient intensive care unit/emergency rooms, four interview consultation rooms, one model apartment for in-home situations, two debriefing rooms and a multipurpose training room with a separate area for training standardized patients.

"This facility will allow our community medical students to train in facilities equal to any available in this country," says University of Oklahoma President David L. Boren. "We deeply appreciate the generosity of those who made it possible."

Funding for construction of the facility was provided by a grant from the Tandy Foundation. The grant will also support the purchase of equipment, including simulators, computers, software, cameras, monitors and trainers.

Additional funding for social simulation was provided by a grant from the Charles and Lynn Schusterman Family Foundation. The Schusterman Social Simulation wing features a fully furnished apartment that allows students to practice assessment and intervention skills in a home environment with trained actors.

tact with live patients. The result is reduced medical errors, improved patient safety and reduced overall health care costs. During the simulation, students might treat a patient who is experiencing a heart attack or other emergency situations. After a simulated scenario is completed, students receive feedback and instruction from medical faculty and other student observers. In addition, all simulations are videotaped and reviewed by students and faculty for further educational instruction.

The simulation center will be available to all University of Oklahoma School of Community Medicine students, physician assistant students, resident physicians and faculty as well as students in nursing, social work, human relations and other non-medical programs. The center also will offer community hours during which it can be utilized by medical personnel practicing in the Tulsa community who need additional training and certifications. It is anticipated that the simulation center will be used by approximately 1,000 health care professionals annually.

This fall, the inaugural class of first-year students from the OU-TU School of Community Medicine began their studies at OU-Tulsa. These students will complete all four years of their medical education at the OU-TU School of Community Medicine. OU College of Medicine faculty in Oklahoma City and Tulsa as well as TU faculty are teaching the students and utilizing the Tandy Education Center.

OSU-CHS Professor Researches Ways to Prevent Infections

Due to many cystic fibrosis patients dying from chronic pulmonary infections, an Oklahoma State University Center for Health Sciences researcher is looking at ways to prevent deadly bacteria from invading the lungs.

"My primary aim is to learn more about the basic biology of bacteria and come up with novel ways to combat them," says Franklin Champlin, Ph.D., associate professor of microbiology at OSU-CHS. "We want to better understand how certain types of bacteria cause opportunistic infections in the lungs of cystic fibrosis patients and determine the factors that make them so virulent."

Cystic fibrosis is a genetic disease that causes the body to produce unusually thick and sticky mucus that lead to chronic lung infections.

It can affect the lungs, intestines, liver, pancreas and kidneys.

About 70,000 people worldwide and 30,000 people in the United States are living with the disease, and approximately 1,000 new cases are diagnosed each year, according to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation. There is no cure for the frequently fatal disorder.

Champlin is particularly interested in why the antimicrobial agents used to fight infections are able to enter some bacterial cells but not others.

"Cystic fibrosis patients have compromised immune systems, lacking the ability to fight off bacterial infections like a normal, healthy adult," he says. "The bacteria that set up these chronic infections do so because they have certain chemical and physical properties that take advantage of the situation."

FRANKLIN CHAMPLIN

Champlin, who also is professor emeritus of microbiology at Mississippi State University, has narrowed his research to two antimicrobial agents - daptomycin and triclosan. Daptomycin is an effective antibiotic but only for one group of bacteria. Champlin also is interested in the antimicrobial compound triclosan because it is potent against a broad array of bacteria. The antiseptic is widely used in soaps, lotions, plastics and cosmetics.

By learning what makes these bacteria cause infections and what mechanisms deter certain compounds from eliminating them, Champlin believes scientists can develop treatments that will more effectively combat lung infections in cystic fibrosis patients.

"We are very excited about learning more about the basic biology of certain bacteria and how to better deal with these organisms," he says.

As children, Stephanie and Seth were both severely burned in separate accidents. Brought to the Alexander Burn Center at Hillcrest Medical Center a month apart, they likely passed each other in the hallway as patients. However, it wasn't until later when they began attending a local camp for burn survivors that they finally met. Today, as they plan their wedding, the unique bond they share is unmistakable. # Child Advocate Discusses Internet Misconceptions

Managing Editor

On Nov 5, Dr. David Finkelhor spoke at the OU-Tulsa Schusterman Center regarding "Myths and Realities About Internet Crimes Against Children."

Finkelhor is the director of Crimes Against Children Research Center, co-director of the Family Research Laboratory, and professor of sociology and university professor at the University of New Hampshire. He began to study the problems of child victimization, child maltreatment and family violence in 1977.

In 2008, he published the book "Childhood Victimization: Violence, Crime and Abuse in the Lives of Young People."

Greater Tulsa Reporter: What misconceptions verses realities have you found in your research involving the Internet with regard to sexual predators?

David Finkelhor: Over the years, our society has experienced this almost hysteria on the dangers of the Internet particularly for young children. However, instead of the danger being that of pedophiles who are targeting young children, the reality is that adolescents are more often the target. Usually, young children are more well supervised and not using the Internet in a way that makes them a target.

Research shows that the majority of online predators develop relationships with vulnerable teenagers, with predators often being individuals who are known to the adolescent, such as teachers, coaches, neighbors. The victims are usually troubled teenagers in need of friendship, guidance and sympathetic adults.

Research shows that predators usually do not deceive their victims. Few lie about being a youth or hide their sexual intentions. In reality, victims often meet their predators for sex willingly and repeatedly, and many claim to be "in love."

GTR: Are there other misconceptions that you found through your research?

DF: The subject of bullying: while cyberbullying may be on the rise, the overall percentage of adolescent face-to-face bullying or victimization is on the decline, with a 74 percent decrease from 1992-2010, according to the U.S. Department of Justice. Research shows that cyberbullying mostly occurs in conjunction with face-to-face bullying and is not a separate problem.

GTR: Thanks to your research, how do you feel about the way the Internet affects our youth?

DF: The notion that the Internet and technology are corrupting our youth is not supported by today's research. We are seeing that kids are more virtuous today and better protected than ever before. We are seeing an overall decline in sex crimes, bullying and risky behavior.

Such things as binge drinking and suicide are declining.

In addition, the Internet benefits law enforcement agents by bringing hidden crimes to light more quickly; helping to catch offenders earlier in their offending history; providing high quality evidence that results in high conviction rates; and bringing to light bullying and abuse situations.

GTR: How should future education about the Internet and online predators be handled so as to avoid these types of misconceptions?

DF: Aim prevention efforts, instead of solely at parents, at adolescents in middle school and high school. Acknowledge teenagers' interest in sex. Educate them about sexual activities such as child pornography, sexual crimes and transmission of sexual photos.

Educate youth on cyberbullying and when joking and teasing turns into cyberbullying.

GTR: What changes would you like to see occur based on these findings?

DF: Don't allow Internet abuse concerns to eclipse or distract from the general campaign against child molesting and child abuse. Rather than focusing solely on Internet safety, we need to incorporate Internet safety into broader evidence-based education programs on personal safety, sex education, socio-emotional education and decision making. Our youth need to be educated on generic skills that improve both their online and offline decision making, health and safety.

OSUIT Unveils Honorary Pistol Pete Statue

On Oct. 26, Oklahoma State University Institute of Technology held a dedication ceremony for the new Pistol Pete Plaza and unveiled a bronze statue of Frank "Pistol Pete" Eaton, honoring the man who has become the symbol and mascot of Oklahoma State University. The event was held on Eaton's birthday.

The 12-foot-tall statue stands on a 6-foot-tall stone base and sits at the campus' south entrance.

The statue was sculpted by Oklahoma artist Wayne Cooper, who has shown pieces in galleries and museums all over the world. Cooper specializes in western art on large canvases and larger-than-life sculptures.

Cooper's original Pistol Pete statue stands in Perkins, Oklahoma: Eaton's hometown.

OSUIT President Bill Path says that he learned about Cooper and his statue after Vice President of Fiscal Services Jim Smith visited the Oklahoma Territorial Plaza in Perkins and saw the Pistol Pete sculpture.

"With this statue in place, no one can mistake that OSUIT in Okmulgee is a true campus of OSU," Path says. "This statue will become a source of pride for our campus and a popular backdrop and symbol for the university."

Student Prepares for Career as Particle Physicist

Jenks High Schooler Embraces STEM

STEM is an acronym for Science, Technology, Engineering and Math education. Tulsa Tech's S T E M Academy focuses on these areas together not only because the skills and knowledge in each discipline are essential for student success but also because these fields are deeply intertwined in the real world.

Students in Tulsa Tech's S T E M Academy make their own path as they design and build unique creations, utilizing digital circuits, gaming software, model structures, remote control machines and robots. Students work individually and in teams to solve unique engineering challenges, using engineering equipment and current software, as they prepare for careers in areas such as software design, chemical engineering and physics.

Kaitlyn Ragosta, a second year STEM Academy student, has set her sights on a high-energy career, as a theoretical high-energy particle physicist.

"I always knew that I wanted to study a subject related to science," Ragosta says. "Once I started reading about working with particle accelerators, I knew that was exactly what I wanted to do."

Particle accelerators are devices that use electromagnetic fields to propel charged particles to high speeds, while containing them in well-defined beams, and are best known for their use in particle physics. Sometimes referred to as colliders, particle accelerators provide evidence of the structure of the subatomic world and were commonly referred to as atom smashers in the 20th century. Today, there are currently more than 30,000 accelerators in operation around the world.

"I want to work with particle accelerators to explore and explain phenomenon on the subatomic level," she says. "My goal is to earn a doctorate in physics, and although I'm looking at several universities, my first choice of schools is MIT (Massachusetts Institute of Technology)."

Teddy Wyatt, a pre-engineering instructor at Tulsa Tech's STEM Academy, feels his former student has the ability to succeed in this exciting and challenging career field.

"Katy has an exceptional combination of insight and ingenuity," Wyatt says. "She's able to quickly grasp concepts and extend them to application faster than the typical student."

The Jenks High School senior credits her school for her initial interest in science and engineering along with her decision to pursue her academic goals at Tulsa Tech.

"Jenks High School was really good about advocating and making students aware of course offerings, including Intro to Engineering Design and Principles of Engineering," says Ragosta. "I was able to study those courses before continuing my studies at Tulsa Tech's STEM Academy."

Like other STEM faculty members, Carole Forsberg, a pre-engineering instructor, also believes her student has both the skills, and the character traits, necessary to succeed.

"Katy has the winning combination of ability and hard work," Forsberg says. "She's brought those traits to her senior design project, and she definitely has a promising future."

If you're looking for exciting classes for high school and adult students, award-winning business and industry training, or are ready to engineer your next career, Tulsa Tech invites you to visit today. For more information, please call 918-828-5200 or visit us online at tulsatech.edu.

Teachers Receive Grants From Community

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

Teachers at Tulsa Public Schools' Mark Twain Elementary are experiencing firsthand the generosity of the local community.

Recently, teachers at Mark Twain were searching for ways they could get items for their classrooms that they couldn't afford to purchase themselves.

Mark Twain media specialist Rebecca Harris, who had already received two past grants from donorschoose.org, helped to lead a professional development workshop to show the teachers how to use the public school funding site.

Harris initially learned about donorschoose.org from a teacher at Cooper Elementary, where she worked previously. "She was always getting these grants, and I thought, 'How is she doing that?'" says Harris.

Public school teachers request supplies and post their projects to donorschoose.org. Once the grant amount has been reached, the national nonprofit vets the cost of the projects and directly ships the teachers the supplies requested.

Needless to say, Harris was more than eager for her fellow teachers at Mark Twain to learn how to utilize donorschoose.org, and she has been more than thrilled with the results.

So far this school year, five teachers, including Harris, have received grants from donorschoose.org, with more teachers waiting for their grants to be funded.

"Every time we heard a piercing scream in the school, we knew another teacher had found out their grant had been funded," laughs Harris.

In September, ImpactTulsa launched an effort to help fund supplies for kindergarten through third grade literacy innovations for Tulsa-area teachers. Thanks to the generosity of over 514 community donors, more than 12,000 students will be impacted by $120,000 in local donor funding to enrich reading strategies throughout the region. ImpactTulsa launched the match project with 15 partner school districts through donorschoose.org and with matching support of two local foundations, George Kaiser Family Foundation and Charles and Lynn Schusterman Family Foundation.

Nationally, students who are not reading proficiently by third grade are four times more likely to drop out of high school. At the current rate, more than 16,000 Tulsa-area kids will drop out over the course of a decade. ImpactTulsa's matching project is aimed directly at changing that statistic.

"It's a wonderful feeling to know that other people care about the education of our students and to know that ImpactTulsa cares and that Kathy Taylor cares," says Harris.

Mark Twain teachers and their students are all planning to send thank-you notes to ImpactTulsa.

"We want them to know how much we appreciate this," she continues.

Harris received a grant that she wrote for $450 for books for early readers.

Fourth grade teachers Toni Lohnbakken and Paula Watson both received grants to provide individual pencil sharpeners for every student in their classes.

"We lost a lot of class time because lines would form for students to use my one classroom pencil sharpener that was available," says Lohnbakken. "Since we have gotten the sharpeners, the kids can focus better, and we've gotten a lot more done."

This was Watson's first time to use donorschoose.org. Before receiving this grant, her classroom did not have any pencil sharpeners at all.

"It's made a huge difference to have the sharpeners," she says.

Brooke Coney, who teaches first grade, received a $1,000 grant for pencil sharpeners and math, social studies, language arts and science activity cards.

"The generosity that flows from the citizens of our community to our school is overwhelming," she says.

"This is a good example of the kindness of strangers. I hope that this gives our students respect for humanity, and one day maybe they'll pay it forward."

Pre-K teacher Cynthia McManus was awarded a $500 grant for science-related items, including binoculars and a butterfly nursery, which students will use in the spring to observe the full life cycle of butterflies.

"We are excited to see the depth of support for helping our talented and passionate educators in our region. We know that nationally teachers spend more than $1.6 billion out of their own pockets for classroom supplies," says Kathy Taylor, ImpactTulsa CEO.

Edison Wrestling on the Rebound, Needs Support

By MIKE MOGUIN
Sports Writer

Tulsa Edison High School was a powerhouse wrestling school in the 1960s and 1970s. But it fell on hard times in later years and by the turn of the millennium, it ceased to exist.

The program, however, was revived in 2008. But despite regaining success, which includes its first state champion in 25 years last season, the Eagles are still seeking group and financial support.

Ray Nunneley, who coached the Eagles from 1968-79, is one of the men working as a driving force to returning it to its former glory. He has gathered former Edison grapplers to help promote camps and fundraisers since 2012.

A 1962 graduate of Edison, Nunneley entered coaching right out of college four years later. He was an assistant for two seasons under the legendary Jim Sellers, before taking over as coach. Sellers was the first coach of the program, and the school's field house is named after him. Nunneley took over from Sellers, who became Edison's athletic director.

The Eagles had state titles - one team and 16 individuals from 1958-1977. That included three two-time state champions, two under Nunneley's reign. The highest team finish under Nunneley was fourth place in 1972.

After Nunneley stepped away from coaching to go into the insurance business in 1979, the Eagles did not get another individual state champion until Sam Mack won the 4A Heavyweight medal in 1990. He would be the last before the program ceased a decade later.

Since its revival, Edison has had 10 state qualifiers including Class 5A 132-pound champion Austin O'Brien from last year. The Eagles also finished sixth place in the team standings, its best in 42 years.

Jim Harper, who wrestled at Berryhill in the late 1970s, is the Eagles' current coach and has been there since 2010-11. Jim Shields is also on board as an assistant and has been a big reason why Edison wrestling is doing well. Shields, who was a Big 8 Champion and All-American at Oklahoma State in the late 1960s and early 1970s, has coached several state championship teams and is in the National Wrestling Hall of Fame.

Green Country Camp for Champs is the first step Nunneley took in 2012 to help the program.

"Every year, we had two OU and two OSU national champions come in to do that camp, to promote wrestling and get the other Tulsa schools over to bring their kids and get them fired up."

Cowboy standouts Jordan Oliver and Chris Perry, along with Sooner standouts Kendrick Maple and Cody Brewer attended the first camp.

One of the factors behind the program's success in the 1970s was known in coaching circles as "Feeder Programs."

"All the kids wrestled at local clubs," Nunneley says. "Henthorne, Whiteside (associated with Tulsa parks), they were just youth wrestling programs that fed our programs and the schools decided that those programs needed to be brought into the school system."

The program was eventually killed.

Parental involvement was also huge back in the day, something that Nunneley and Eagle alums are attempting to rejuvenate.

"When I brought some ex-wrestlers for a match, I think there was as many of us as there were fans in the stands. That's really sad. Back then, I had all these parents that supported it, along with all the feeder programs. Tulsa schools supported it and they were all neighborhood kids coming to the schools.

"Now, we don't have neighborhood programs. When we get through with wrestling practice, we're having to haul kids off from one end of the county to the other," Nunneley said.

Under today's rules, youths can go wherever they wish, regardless of where they live. That, Nunneley said, kills programs.

The school would have fundraisers for the program back then, but today, many alums have separate accounts for fundraising activities, which helps in purchases of uniforms and bags for the athletes.

"The (alums) have been good at financially helping us," Nunneley says. "What I would like to see more of, is parent and student involvement. These guys are doing a great job of working with the wrestlers and getting them up to speed. But it's disappointing when they're coming out to wrestle and there is no one in the stands. That's my mission this year is to get people in the stands."

They are also hoping to encourage football players who are not in basketball to come out, when the season is over, and have alums talk to them about how wrestling helped them as football players.

"They don't understand that," Nunneley says. "Because look how long they didn't have wrestling in Tulsa schools. Everyone has gone out to the suburbs."

While the Eagles have their duals at the old Jim Sellers Fieldhouse, they will host three tournaments at the school's newer Edison Preparatory Athletic Complex.

One is the Battle of the Belt on Dec. 19 at the EPAC. It is a national tournament known that is open to ages 15-and-under. They're hoping to get wrestlers from Texas, Kansas, Arkansas and Missouri, as well as in-state. The winner gets a big belt.

Nunneley hopes this tournament will be the main fundraiser for the program and the feeder programs.

eBook About Metro Tulsa Gains Popularity

By DAVE ANDREWS
Contributing Writer

The people, places, teams and events that make metropolitan Tulsa unique are featured in the first comprehensive eBook about this area's contributions in entertainment, athletics, industry, education, religion and the American way of life.

"Derricks, Diamonds and Dreams: Life and Sports in the Tulsa Oil Patch" was published in July 2015 and quickly received national and international distribution from well-known eBook retailers such as Amazon, Apple, Barnes and Noble, Kobo and many others.

Some reviews have likened the eBook to a

Ken Burns public television documentary. While there is in-depth information about each subject, the presentations are entertaining.

The eBook's author, Elven Lindblad, is a life-long resident of metropolitan Tulsa with over 40 years of experience in research for such diverse industries as background screening, print and electronic communications, private education, and financial institutions.

"Derricks, Diamonds and Dreams" originally focused strictly on metropolitan Tulsa's sports heritage. Then, conversations with out-of-state visitors planted a seed that grew into something much larger.

"To a person, every one of them said they wanted to learn everything possible about all aspects of Tulsa in a single book or eBook. For people considering relocating here for employment or other reasons, they says that is very important," Lindblad said.

"There have been many intriguing books written about Tulsa's civic history, minor league baseball, the 1921 Tulsa Race Riot and other topics, but most of those focused on a single subject," he continues.

"There was almost nothing that connected all aspects of life in Tulsa and the surrounding communities. So the more I thought about it, the more sense it made, and it was written that way."

An interesting story in "Derricks, Diamonds and Dreams" is the invention of the batting tee by the manager of the 1966 Tulsa Oilers baseball team, Charlie Metro, and how he lost out on millions of dollars from his creation.

In 1942, Metro played against Tulsa as a member of the Beaumont Exporters but couldn't hit worth a lick. While working after that season at a Pennsylvania rubber factory, he stacked rubber tubes of various sizes atop each other, put an old mattress nearby, placed a ball on top of those tubes and hit it into the mattress. Dollar signs soon danced in Metro's head.

"Charlie completed the necessary paperwork to patent his creation but never paid the filing fee because minor league baseball players weren't paid very much during the 1940s," Lindblad says. "He kept putting it off, and others soon capitalized on his mistakes.

"Nevertheless, every child or grandchild that ever played tee ball owes a debt of gratitude to the manager of the 1966 Tulsa Oilers," he adds.

Tennis at LaFortune Park Becomes First Class

Michael D. Case, Fred Perry Serve Up Excellent Tulsa Facility

By GLENN HIBDON
GTR Sports Writer

A tennis renaissance has bloomed at LaFortune Park in Tulsa. With the completion of the Case Tennis Center, dreams have come true and created what those in the know say is the finest public tennis facility in the United States.

Eight years in creation, the tennis mecca on Hudson Street is "on par" with the center that bears the same name at the University of Tulsa, according to former County Commissioner Fred Perry, one of the founding fathers of the project. Perry spearheaded a drive that raised $5.5 million in public and private funds to make the project a reality.

"I had a hard time believing it would happen. The indoor courts are icing on the cake," says Melissa McCorkle, director of tennis for Tulsa County Parks. "Everything is first class and it's rare to find a public facility with indoor courts, especially in this part of the country. It took so long to raise the money that we had to take baby steps. It was a team effort, but Fred was the driving force."

Perry is a lifelong tennis player and served as a Tulsa County commissioner for more than six years. McCorkle and Frank Ward, head of the Tulsa Tennis Association, approached Perry about the project in 2007 and fund raising soon began.

"They said 'Fred, you've played at LaFortune Park and you know how bad the courses are. And we don't have enough of them,'" recalls Perry. "I knew what the need was and I had Richard Bales (director of Tulsa Parks) sit in on the meeting. He agreed we would make an effort, but we were talking about a lot of money and there was no money, in the budget."

Not to worry. Perry, Ward, McCorkle, et al started Operation Facelift, a fund drive that would eventually raise the necessary finances. The group began calling on corporations, foundations and individuals, pleading their case and promoting the advantages to Tulsa. The private sector gave $3.5 million and another $2 million came from Vision 2025.

Perry also approached Mike Case and Associates, the apartment developers, to lend a hand.

Here he is with University of Tulsa Athletic Director Derrick Gragg during a recent visit with the media to discuss the May 2016 NCAA Division I Men's and Women's Tennis Championships to be held at the Michael D. Case Tennis Center on the TU Campus.

play matches here. Many of them also practice here," says Perry, who played high school tennis in Junction City, Kansas, placing sixth in the state meet. "The LaFortune Park site has also become a hub for small college programs. John Brown, Northeastern State and Arkansas-Little Rock routinely play quad matches there and participation in all phases has doubled since the project began.

"In 2002, we had 12 courts and 20,000 players that year. Now we have 45,500 a year," McCorkle says. "We're always on the lookout to bring more people to Tulsa."

The numbers are indeed impressive. Over 350 junior players call the Case Tennis Center home, there are more 10-and-under players than any private club in Tulsa and 93 USTA teams, and 27 recreational league teams suit up. There are also nine USPTA teaching pros on hand.

"Our main selling point is that our facility is good for the economic development of the city," Perry says. "With better facilities we're able to attract more tournaments. The second thing is

CASE FOR CASE: Michael D. Case holds the scissors as he readies to cut the ribbon at the Case Tennis Center at LaFortune Park. From left are former Tulsa Mayor Bob LaFortune, Tennis Director Melissa McCorkle, Former County Commissioner Fred Perry, Mike Case, tennis community leader Frank Ward, major contributors Debbie and John Hale, Tulsa County Commissioner Karen Keith and Tulsa County Park Director Richard Bales.

LaFortune had to stop a lot of youth development programs in the winter because we had no indoor facilities. Now we're able to expand and get more underserved kids into the sport.

"The third benefit of our project is public health through exercise."

McCorkle says future plans include organizing a wheelchair tournament and continuing the Tennis Ball in the Spring, an event that has attracted famed pros such as Mats Wilander in the past.

"People from out of town and out of state rave about our club," McCorkle says. "They say they've never seen anything like it before. They say it's the best public facility they've seen. It belongs to the whole city, not just to those who play tennis."

Perry and McCorkle say another benefit is that people who have never played the sport before have decided to give it a try. Private clubs are in cooperation because many players who start at Case Tennis Center will eventually join a private club for the social aspect. There was no "push back" when the LaFortune Park group was raising funds. "We have first class lights, playing service, fencing, everything," says Perry. "This really is a dream come true."

Cedric Cudjoe Pushes Self After Childhood Accident

Seminole Star Played in 1st Tournament of Champions

By TERRELL LESTER
Editor at large

As a participant in the inaugural schoolboy basketball Tournament of Champions, Cedric Cudjoe would have been justified if he had been a little bedazzled by the competition.

Yet, despite the presence of such hoops luminaries as Ray Russell, Charlie Wallace and Sparky Grober, All-Staters all, Cudjoe felt right at ease. No hint of intimidation.

Cudjoe was a 6-foot-1 reserve for Class A Seminole, at a time when Class 2A was the largest classification for Oklahoma high schools.

"I considered it a privilege just to be able to play in a tournament as big as that tournament was," he said recently during an afternoon visit in his charming Oklahoma City home with his high school coach J.V. Haney.

"It was an outstanding event. It was outstanding in that you were surrounded by so many great, well-known basketball players," he said.

Cedric Cudjoe might not have been one of those "great" or "well-known" basketball players, players whose names and exploits have become an indelible part of state hoops lore since that January weekend in Tulsa in 1966 when a tournament tradition was born.

But Cedric Cudjoe used his modest high school basketball career as the foundation for a life of inspiration, a life of edification, a life devoted to education.

Seminole won one game and finished in sixth place in the 1966 Tournament of Champions, played at Memorial High School. The 51st edition of the tournament will unfold Dec. 28-30 in the Mabee Center on the campus of Oral Roberts University.

Just as the tournament has grown and evolved into a holiday basketball bonanza over the half-century since its inception, so, too, has Cedric Cudjoe matured into a pillar of respect and accomplishment.

Cudjoe's life journey, from teenage athlete to retired educator, was fueled by fearless resolve, singular courage, inexorable willpower.

He had to overcome extreme obstacles.

He had to prove himself. To himself. To others.

He had to demonstrate that one man's disability was another man's motivation.

Before he could play basketball, he had to teach himself to run.

At the age of 18 months, he lost half of his right foot following a freakish accident.

For more than six years, at a time when being an absolute, red-blooded, All-American boy with boundless energy was a natural evolution for most of his Seminole neighborhood pals, Cudjoe watched life unfold from afar.

He was told he would never play sports.

Fitted with what he called "a very antiquated contraption," Cudjoe had difficulty doing what others took for granted.

"I couldn't keep up with my sister walking to school," he said. "I just couldn't do much."

As a toddler, he left his home while his parents were inside with friends and crawled under a car parked in the driveway. When the guests were leaving, not knowing of Cedric's whereabouts, the driver of the car backed over both legs of the youngster.

Just as the front tires were closing in on Cedric, an alert delivery man making his rounds began shouting and waving at the driver.

Within milliseconds, Cedric was saved from an even worse fate.

One leg, he said, healed effectively.

The other leg, his right, did not. Doctors removed the front half of his foot.

He learned to walk wearing a garish brace that enveloped his right leg.

By the time he was 8, gangrene was beginning to spread up his leg. Amputation, at the knee, was the only solution.

Technology was changing throughout those years, Cudjoe said, and in the summer of 1956, he was fitted with the prosthetic leg that would enable him to once and for all kick down the barriers that had separated him from his dreams.

Tolerating and wearing the COACH AND PLAYER: J.V. Haney, left, coached Cedric Cudjoe in Seminole in 1966, the first year of the Tournament of Champions. Cudjoe overcame the loss of a leg to become an excellent basketball player, and later in life he served as a successful educator.

SHOCKING THE SHOCKERS: TU senior guard Shaquile Harris elevates over a crowd of Wichita State defenders in a Nov. 17 game at the Reynolds Center. The Golden Hurricane upset the no. 9-ranked Shockers 77-67, its first win over a top-ten team since beating the seventh-ranked Cincinnati Bearcats in the 2000 NCAA tournament. Harris led TU in scoring with 20 points, including clutch free throws down the stretch.

apparatus that he did until he was 8, Cudjoe said, "I don't know if there were any others in existence other than the one that I had on."

"I kind of considered myself as a disabled handicapped person."

But with the new prosthetic, he said, "I was 8 years old and I discovered that I could move around quite well."

It was the beginning of the next chapter of Cedric Cudjoe's life.

"I said I was going to make every effort to be able to do what everybody else was doing," he said. "I didn't know if I was going to be able to make it, but I was going to give it my best shot."

That declaration to succeed, that vision of purpose at such a young age, was the result of his wish to alleviate the pain, the guilt, his parents must have endured.

"I always felt that even up to the time that they both passed, that I could always see behind their eyes," he said. "I knew how hurt they were over what had happened. I think they, like most other people in the neighborhood, always felt that Cedric was going to be the little crippled child in the neighborhood."

"I knew they didn't want that to be. And I knew I needed to do something to get some of that weight off of them. I wanted my parents to not feel bad about what had happened.

"I just pushed myself. When I learned how to run, that was it."

"I found out that I had athletic skills. Just as good, better, than some. I enjoyed sports, and I was thinking that 'this will do it,'" he said.

Slowly, but surely, adapting to his new prosthesis, 8-year-old Cedric went out for a Seminole elementary school baseball team. As a catcher.

"My team didn't have a catcher," he said. "I determined that I could get down there, squat down behind home plate, and play catcher. And when it came my turn to bat, (his team could) just skip over me."

Cedric and his teammates took easily to the challenges.

"I got a lot of catching experience," he said with a smile.

There was just one element missing from his game.

"I said, 'you know, you're walking, you're squatting and catching the ball, now you need to run,'" he said.

Again, he pushed himself.

"Whenever I had complete

Dedicated Athlete Became Successful Educator

 privacy, that's when I would go to the backyard and I would practice my running," he said.
 "I'd run from one end of the yard to the other."
 Slowly at first. Then a little faster. Always with dedication. With perseverance.
 "I never fell," he said. "Never did. Never did."
 Still, there were periods of trepidation, fear.
 Cudjoe recalled a basketball camp during his elementary school days. The Seminole High School coach, Cletus Green, who would go on to a college career that included a stop as women's coach at Oral Roberts University, was in charge of the camp.
 Cudjoe admitted to being hesitant to joining the camp.
 "If Coach Green finds out that that kid over there just has one leg, he might send me back to the house," Cudjoe said.
 "But he never said a word about it during the entire camp. He treated me just like he treated everybody else."
 Green told young Cedric: "I don't expect anything more, I don't expect anything less. Just give it your best shot."
 "That was a lot of encouragement to me," Cedric said. "It was like I had two so-called normal legs like everybody else."
 "I think had he sent me home, I don't know what that would have done to me."
 "It told me, 'Cudjoe, if you do your best, and you're good enough, I don't think anybody's going to pay attention to (having one prosthesis).'"

"That was a great deal of encouragement. In elementary school, I played on all the baseball and basketball teams. Everything just continued to get better," he said.
 "When I look back at it, it was a blessing that I was in a small town; I was in a small, black elementary school. Segregation was still in place."
 In that school, incorporating grades five through seven, Cudjoe estimated that the boys numbered about a dozen.
 "I discovered that I was a better athlete than half of them," he said. "(Competing) allowed me to have the opportunity while I was trying to enhance these skills (and playing on a prosthetic leg)."
 "Had I been in a large school, if integration had already taken place, with a lot more competition, I've always wondered how I would have fared, if I could have pushed myself to the point of doing what I wanted to do anyway."
 The prosthesis was not so strong as Cudjoe's will.
 He broke it in many places many times. Made of wood and metal, the limb was attached to a foot with an iron bolt.
 He recalled breaking the limb one night during a junior high baseball game. The Oklahoma City-based courier service Mistletoe Express picked up the damaged limb the next day and scheduled a return delivery.
 "I remember sitting on the front porch with my full baseball uniform on, looking down the street and hoping that the Mistletoe Express was turning the corner," he said.

 "And, believe it or not, that Mistletoe Express turned the corner. I grabbed that leg just in time for (Coach) Charlie Jones to pick us up and take us to the ball game."
 Cudjoe longed to play football. Doctors, however, ruled that out, fearing that the prosthetic leg would prove more harm to Seminole opponents than to Cedric.
 "That hurt me so bad because when I was a senior, we had a wide receiver and I could out-run him, and I could catch better than he could," Cudjoe said. "I know that I could have been first-string wide receiver, and it bothered me."
 Haney was hired at Seminole before the start of Cudjoe's senior year.
 Like Green before him, Haney asked only that Cudjoe give his best.
 Cudjoe did.
 In wind sprints, Haney said that Cudjoe never finished last.
 In distance runs of up to two miles, Haney said that Cudjoe never finished last.
 "I was just motivated," Cudjoe said.
 "He never wanted, and he wouldn't accept, any type of break," Haney said. "If he thought we were favoring him in any way, he demanded the same treatment as his teammates."
 Cudjoe's strong suit has been, and remains, his positive attitude.
 "While I was in high school, had I had two so-called normal legs, I probably could have been All-State in just about any sport that I wanted to play," he said.

 Haney said, "If you didn't know that he had an artificial leg, you would not be able to tell by the way he played."
 Through the vision of an adult, the experience of a 42-year career educator, Cudjoe believes life unfolds in certain ways, for certain reasons.
 "I reached a point where I felt that had I had two normal legs and been as great as I think I could have been, that I probably would have wound up playing some form of pro ball, made a lot of money and probably would have been one of the biggest fools around," he said.
 "I have always felt that the Lord said, 'Cedric, I'm going to slow you down.'
 "I have also felt that just looking around at a lot of different people, that folks get married and they marry the wrong person and have a very miserable life."
 "I have always been very thankful that the Lord gave me who He gave me (his wife, Thomesene, and two children). I've been married for 45 years and I am 100 percent happy with those 45 years."
 "That's two things that the Lord did for me. I'm thankful that He didn't allow me know what it was like to have two so-called normal legs," Cudjoe said.
 "I don't linger on that. I know what He gave me and I did what I could with what He gave me. I'm happy."
 Now 67, Cudjoe spent all of his adult life in Oklahoma City, as teacher, counselor and consultant. He was inducted into the Seminole High School Hall of Fame in 2006.

 His career path was all but pre-determined. His parents were educators. His uncles, including celebrated Oklahoma City high school basketball coach Lawrence Cudjoe, and a succession of cousins have been career educators.
 Education, Cedric Cudjoe said, was "a family requirement."
 So, too, was determination and love.
 "I never thought about (wearing a prosthesis) as overcoming," he said. "I didn't consider myself to be handicapped."
 "I never gave any consideration to overcoming anything."
 "It was just wanting to do what everybody else was doing. That pushed me."
 "That, along with trying to do something to let my parents know what happened happened. And that's over with, and we can't go back and reverse it. But I want you all to know that it didn't slow me down."
 "My Mama used to come to the Friday night games in Seminole and set up in the stands and cry," Cudjoe said.
 "I knew that she had felt bad all that time about what happened."
 "I was glad that I could do some things to let her see that her son was just fine."
 Cudjoe's high school coach says the teenager proved his point.
 "Cedric's positive attitude and approach to life is beyond imagination," Haney said. "I understand why he became such a success in education. And, a success in life."

Grandma's Recipe Makes Billy Ray's BBQ Unique

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

When Billy Ray Cooper found the recipe for his Grandma Minnie's barbecue sauce in her silverware chest, he knew he had found something special.

"She used to make that sauce, put it in mason jars and give some to everyone in the family," he remembers.

After Minnie passed away, Cooper was going through her home, looking for things to help him remember her and his grandfather.

After he stumbled upon her sauce recipe, he walked to the neighborhood grocery store near his home, bought all of the recipe's ingredients and made the sauce.

Thus began the journey of the creation of Billy Ray's Catfish & BBQ.

Cooper opened his first barbecue location in 1984 at 3524 S.W. Blvd., and after 30 years, the original Billy Ray's location remains.

However, before opening shop, Cooper knew there was a bit of preparation to be done.

JENKS LOCATION OPENS: On Aug. 25, Billy Ray Cooper opened his third Billy Ray's BBQ location, at 399 E. Main St. in Jenks, in the same location that served as home to Billy Ray's BBQ in the 1990s.

"I taught myself how to cook barbecue," he says. "I bought $1,000 worth of meat and cooked it all. My friends came and ate it, and they all loved it."

Before becoming a restaurateur, Cooper worked as a fireman and owned a service station. Yet, when the opportunity arose to showcase the quality and flavor of his grandmother's sauce, he couldn't deny it. And customers have responded equally favorably.

Over the years, Cooper expanded Billy Ray's BBQ throughout the greater Tulsa area and beyond to fill customers' barbecue demands.

"When we first opened in 1984, there were only a few barbecue restaurants in the area," he says. "No comparison to the number that Tulsa has now."

In order to remain efficient, Cooper now owns and operates three Billy Ray's in the Tulsa area.

His Broken Arrow restaurant, located at 1904 S. Elm Pl., opened in March 2010, and on Aug. 25, Cooper opened a third Billy Ray's, at 399 E. Main St. in Jenks, the same location that served as home to Billy Ray's in the 1990s.

"I always regretted leaving that Jenks location," he says, because of the loyalty of the customer base and the strong community support of the school district.

"On a (football) game night, you can hardly move on Main Street," he laughs.

After 30 years, customers remain strongly supportive of Billy Ray's sliced brisket, ribs and tabouli — the restaurant's three biggest sellers. Also high on the list of popular items is the restaurant's catfish, which Cooper started selling in 1996, with a special seasoning and breading preparation that "I believe makes our catfish the best catfish in the state," Cooper says.

Besides good food, family can also be felt at Cooper's restaurants. Five of his grandchildren work at the three locations, his wife, Sherry, decorated all three restaurants' interiors, and a photo of one of his nephews can be seen proudly on display in the dining room at the Jenks location.

All three Billy Ray's Catfish & BBQ locations are open Tuesday through Saturday with specials running daily, including a Christmas meal special coming soon.

Annual Arabian Show Boosts Local Economy

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

Kay Stone Buford knows the power of a horse and its powerful connection with a human.

"I was raised on the back of a horse," she says.

Buford, who grew up in southeastern Oklahoma, was not yet three years old when her father brought home her first horse. Buford and all of her friends grew up riding horses together.

"It fills something inside that's indescribable; that relationship with a horse is special," she says.

"Horses were my security blanket."

Buford grew up and became a licensed clinical social worker, but she never forgot the impact that horses had on her early years.

"If you ever experience horses to the level that I have, you don't ever forget it."

After Buford retired in 2000, she decided to become a horse owner once again.

Although Buford was acquainted with many kinds of horses, the Arabian horse especially drew her attention.

"There's something in the DNA that creates a connection between Arabian horses and humans," she says. "Owning an Arabian, it was different from other horses, the depth of the relationship."

Since 2007, Buford has bred five Arabians; three of those five competed at this year's U.S. National Arabian and Half-Arabian Championship Horse Show at Tulsa's Expo Square.

Buford's passion for and knowledge of Arabian horses made her a prime candidate a few years ago, to help bring the national horse show to Tulsa because of several reasons: Tulsa's central location; the equine facilities of the Expo Center, which came about through funding from Vision 2025; and the economic impact generated by the show and visitors.

When the show came to Tulsa for the first time in 2009, Buford held a welcome event at her home in order to introduce local dignitaries to those involved with the Arabian Show.

The 2015 event took place at Expo Square Oct. 23-31; the show brings 1,800 horses, 1,500 people and more than $25 million in total economic impact to Tulsa annually.

The show has two more years before its contract is up for renewal after the 2017 show.

"We have to start planning by the start of 2016 to keep the show returning because other people want it," says Buford.

And Buford is a little worried. "People aren't coming out to the show," she says. The show runs nine days, seven of those days with free admission.

The event also includes vendors of equine goods and other items.

"We need more people coming to the show and shopping at the vendors," she says. "To get this show to remain in Tulsa, we have to develop a culture here."

She attributes the lack of widespread support largely to awareness.

"Expo Square has been wonderful in responding to the show's needs; it's the vendors who need help from the community."

In addition, local publicity is especially important to the show, she says.

She adds, "There are enormous opportunities the event presents for local businesses.

"Local businesses often sell out of supplies when the show is in town.

People who are here from out of town are looking for things to do.

There are so many opportunities for private business owners to create more awareness for trainers and visitors so that these ones are going out and seeing things in Tulsa," she says.

OSU-Tulsa Alumnus Finds Success with MBA Degree

Sean Kouplen, chairman and chief executive officer of Regent Bank, attributes much of his career success to his affiliation with Oklahoma State University.

"I am very grateful to OSU," he says. "It is largely because of the education I received at OSU and the relationships I made during that time that have led to the success I have been fortunate enough to experience."

A bank president and business owner by age 34, Kouplen earned his bachelor's degree at OSU and his Master of Business Administration at OSU-Tulsa. He has been named one of Oklahoma's Most Admired CEOs by the Journal Record and one of OSU's Top 50 MBA Graduates of the century.

OSU-Tulsa President Howard Barnett admires Kouplen for his commitment and dedication to the university.

"His enthusiasm and passion for giving back is powerful and a testament to the academic quality offered at OSU-Tulsa," he says. "We are proud to have one of our most prestigious graduates represent OSU-Tulsa to the community."

Kouplen said when he decided to get his master's degree, he knew immediately OSU-Tulsa was the right place.

"OSU-Tulsa was a godsend. I knew I wanted the quality of degree that OSU offered. But because I was working full time in Tulsa, I would have been unable to drive back and forth to Stillwater," Kouplen says. "The degree I earned at OSU-Tulsa is the same exact degree I would have gotten in Stillwater. It was the perfect solution."

He found the MBA program to be rigorous and more grounded in practical application than theory. It gave him the credibility and preparation he needed for his career.

"Most of my instructors had actually worked in the areas they were teaching," he says. "They offered real-world experience that goes beyond theory and textbooks. They were teaching ideas, concepts and theories they had actually practiced. An MBA from OSU-Tulsa is one of the best investments I have ever made."

One of his favorite instructors was Raj Basu, Ph.D., OSU-Tulsa vice president of academic affairs.

"As a student, Sean Kouplen was a standout. He was eager to use the knowledge he gained in his courses in his real-world career," he says. "He has worked hard to accomplish what he has, and OSU-Tulsa is proud to have played a role in his success."

Thirteen years later, Kouplen still utilizes the knowledge and relationships he gained at OSU-Tulsa within his career.

"I think the value of the OSU network in Tulsa is significant," he says. "We have tens of thousands of alumni in professional positions here in Tulsa. The ability to utilize that network and take advantage of these connections is very beneficial."

Kouplen was appointed to the OSU-Tulsa Board of Trustees in 2014. He views the position as an opportunity to give back to the university that gave so much to him.

"OSU-Tulsa is so important because it provides the opportunity for individuals in Tulsa and surrounding communities to receive a Big 12 public education that otherwise would be out of reach for so many," he says.

As an adjunct professor of finance and management at the Tulsa campus, Kouplen has developed great respect for OSU-Tulsa students.

"There are so many amazing individuals who want to better themselves but are place-bound.

They have jobs, families and other commitments that keep them here in Tulsa," he says. "These students come to OSU-Tulsa to better themselves and they give 110 percent. That is what I am passionate about."

To learn more about Sean Kouplen and his passion for OSU-Tulsa, visit the Distinguished Alumni Series website at www.osu-tulsa.okstate.edu/main/kouplen.php.

E-discovery Firm Holding Seminar for Attorneys

Avansic, an e-discovery and digital forensics firm headquartered in Tulsa, has announced its seventh annual End of the Year Continuing Legal Education (CLE) for attorneys in Oklahoma. The seminars will take place in Oklahoma City on Dec. 8 and in Tulsa on Dec. 9 and are free of charge for all participants.

"About seven years ago, we began providing this educational service to lawyers to specifically focus on e-discovery and digital forensics," says Gavin Manes, CEO of Avansic.

This year, Avansic has revamped its format and is bringing a panel of nationally recognized e-discovery experts and thought leaders for a panel discussion.

"We are thrilled to have the ability to attract such a high-caliber group of panelists," says Manes. "Oklahoma attorneys have the opportunity to learn from several experts from all over the nation, covering a variety of topics such as upcoming trends in e-discovery, assembling an e-discovery team, ethics of e-discovery and cost effective e-discovery.

Panel experts include George Socha, co-founder of EDRM and Socha Consulting. Socha is considered one of the most respected experts in his field and is largely responsible for establishing standards and guidelines for the e-discovery industry.

"Any lawyer should attend this CLE regardless if they may or may not need e-discovery services on their next case," says Manes. "Their corporate client may need advice on discovery issues, or a small matter may turn into a larger matter with discovery or forensic needs."

While the CLE seminars are free, seats are limited, so reservations are required. Both the Oklahoma City and Tulsa seminars are pre-approved for CLE credit in Oklahoma, and credit may be available in other states using self-submission.

To make a reservation, email cle@avansic.com, or for more information, visit www.avansic.com.

OPINION

Our Nation's Air Force: First In, Last Out!

By LARRY SPENCER,
USAF Retired, 4-Star General
President, Air Force Association

LARRY SPENCER

When Saddam Hussein's military forces invaded and seized Kuwait on Aug. 2, 1990, U.S. Air Force men and women swiftly deployed a vast airpower armada to the Gulf. I know first-hand because, as the comptroller for the 4th Fighter Wing, our F-15E aircraft were among the first to deploy. And, as antiquated as it sounds today, I deployed several finance "paying agents" with a briefcase full of cash and checks to begin the initial build-up of forces.

More than 25 years later, I am retired but the Air Force is still in the fight. Without fanfare or bravado, the Air Force seamlessly moved from Desert Shield and the victorious Desert Storm, through Southern Watch and Northern Watch, and straight into 9-11 defense of U.S. air space and combat operations in Afghanistan and Iraq and now over the skies of Syria. Simultaneously, the Air Force responded to crises in the Balkans and the Horn of Africa, Libya, and as rapid responders to humanitarian crises and natural disasters all over the world.

When I grew up in Southeast D.C., my parents laid down a firm rule for my siblings and me to be in the house when the street lights came on. Thinking back on it, I never knew how the lights came on, I just knew, like clock-work, as night approached they came on. For some, Air Force capabilities are like street lights. Not many people know how Air Force satellites provide missile warning or weather or GPS, but they are always on point. Most people don't know how nuclear weapons operate but they know our nuclear deterrent is on the ready, 24/7.

Most Americans are not qualified to fly a jet fighter, but Americans do expect the U.S. Air Force to own the skies and provide freedom of maneuver for U.S. ground forces. When the balloon goes up, hundreds of cargo aircraft appear on the ramp, engines running, and ready to rapidly move people and cargo, anywhere on the globe. And, while most Americans take gas stations on the ground for granted, an Air Force Tanker aircraft coming into view at 35,000 feet to refuel a thirst aircraft is a welcome sight for pilots.

Never before has the nation's ability to project military power depended so heavily on air and space capabilities. Whether it is the principal actor or a supporting force, USAF brings to the fight unsurpassed space, air combat, air mobility, Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance, command and control, and nuclear deterrence, adding strength, flexibility, and resilience to the Joint Force. Often, just our presence acts as a deterrent to conflict or its escalation protecting our national security and interests.

However, these magnificent capabilities don't happen by accident, and over the years, the constant grind of the Air Force has taken a toll on its equipment and people. The Air Force aircraft fleet has reached the point at which it is inefficient and less effective in carrying out their respective tasks. They have sustained considerable wear and tear from combat operations around the world.

USAF proudly defines itself as one Air Force—with Airmen (both military and civilians, active duty, guard and reserve) executing strike, space, mobility, support or special operations missions. They are waging war, performing joint operations, supporting humanitarian relief and transforming in place - all while maintaining America's air and space dominance. For this effort to continue, it deserves our nation's support.

Tulsans Grateful for Mayo's Return to Splendor

On a spring evening when I was 17 and feeling grown up as only a 17-year-old can feel, I took a date to my high school senior prom. I can't remember my date's name, but I remember the ballroom: a large, two-story chamber with tall arched windows and massive chandeliers. The dark red walls contrasted with massive amounts of gilded white plaster moldings. Even then, the ballroom was slightly shabby, but, to us teenagers, the Crystal Ballroom at the top of the Mayo Hotel was the height of elegance.

The Mayo has long been Tulsa's hotel icon. It opened in 1925, a dream project for the Mayo brothers, John and Cass, who were successful oil and gas producers. They previously had built the nearby Mayo Building and had even started an upscale furnishings business they called Mayo's. No expense was spared in building the 600-room hotel. Marble and fine fixtures were utilized in the public spaces. The main lobby had a back-lit stained glass ceiling. There were nine meeting/banquet rooms including the Crystal Ballroom. Most guest rooms had a private bath, a luxury for hotels in the early 1920s. A coffee shop and a restaurant for fine dining were also included. A meal at the Mayo was a special event for most Tulsans.

A book could be written about the celebrities and well-known Tulsans who stayed and sometimes even lived at the Mayo. Eventually, the Mayo family sold the facility to an interested hotel chain. The building passed through four separate hotelier owners, getting shabbier and shabbier before closing in 1981. At the same time, downtown Tulsa, once a center of activity for miles around, had become home to only a few private companies, law firms and government entities. After 5 p.m., sage brush was said to blow through the downtown streets.

A number of developers stepped in to try to resurrect the Mayo Hotel. Although it was listed on the National Register of Historic Places, even the resulting tax credits didn't provide adequate funding to make an undercapitalized project viable. The result was an interior that was gutted of any salvageable materials, leaving the outside shell and only the inside structural frame intact. And so the Mayo sat, forlorn for more than 25 years, waiting for the right person to bring it back to life.

In 2007, downtown Tulsa was starting to revive. The BOK Center was on the drawing boards, and activity, like pollen, was in the air. The patriarch of the Snyder family, John Snyder, with years of construction experience under his belt, decided the Mayo's time had come.

One of the characteristics of a successful developer is recognizing the beginning of a trend. Timing is everything. Snyder has been both shrewd and lucky with his.

Coinciding with the Britney Spears' performance at the BOK Center in 2009, the Mayo reopened as a sophisticated high-end 102-room boutique hotel. There are 42 suites with 26 different layouts. There are five types of basic rooms and 76 residential apartments with 28 different layouts. The main lobby has been appropriately restored to its former glory. During a low point in the hotel's history, the upper half of the two-story lobby had been enclosed to create a new meeting room. The stained glass was hidden above an acoustical tile ceiling. Although only two stained glass ceiling panels remained when restoration work began, these have been duplicated to complete the ceiling. The elevator doors feature the distinct Mayo logo, which is used with great affect in many areas. The coffee shop and restaurant have reappeared, and the penthouse, originally a maintenance room for making metal room keys, has been reinvented as a bar and meeting room facility which opens to a roof terrace with spectacular views of downtown Tulsa. Finally, the historic Crystal Ballroom lives up to its earlier splendor.

Kudos to the Snyder family who still own and operate the Mayo. The Snyders have other projects in the works, including the already-completed conversion of the former City Hall building into a hotel and, currently underway, the former YMCA building into apartments. The value they bring to Tulsa's built environment is incalculable.

STORIED HISTORY: At top, the historic Mayo Hotel sign illuminates the Tulsa skyline. The Mayo Hotel was built in downtown Tulsa in the 1920s by brothers John and Cass Mayo. The hotel was a destination for celebrities and well-known Tulsans. However, as downtown Tulsa declined and the hotel changed hands, the hotel eventually closed in 1981. It was renovated and brought back to its former glory in 2009 by the Snyder family.

Happy Hands Provides One-of-a-Kind Education

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

Al Proo recognized a problem, asked questions and, then, took steps toward a solution.

Thus began the journey of Happy Hands Education Center, a school for children with hearing loss and/or communication disorders.

Proo and his wife became professional American Sign Language interpreters after getting involved in a deaf group at their church in 1980.

After moving to a deaf church to provide further aid to the deaf community, Proo was asked to assume the role of pastor.

For the next almost two decades, "we almost had no hearing friends; we were fully immersed in the deaf culture," Proo says.

As he and his wife made their way deeper into the deaf community, "we saw that many of the deaf had a problem with reading and writing. I thought, 'why is this? It's sad,'" Proo remembers.

Proo approached deaf individuals and area deaf education instructors to find out why. "I found out that there was no early intervention services for deaf children before three years old," he says.

However, 75 percent of brain development, or brain growth, happens in the first three to five years of life. By six years old, the brain is 90 percent of its adult weight, and 95 percent of language has been developed.

STATE-OF-THE-ART BUILDING: Happy Hands Education Center opened in 1994 as a way to combat deaf illiteracy. Its programs are available for children up to six years old with hearing loss and/or communication disorders. In 2010, the nonprofit organization moved into a 22,000-square-foot facility at 8801 S. Garnett Rd.

"Yet, here's a deaf child that can't acquire language because he/she does not get that foundation," Proo says.

"We would see kids come into kindergarten with not nearly what they need in regard to language and then see that gap continue to widen each year to the point that we would see deaf or hard of hearing children graduating high school at second-to-fourth-grade reading levels," says Jan Pride, who succeeded Proo as executive director of Happy Hands three years ago.

In addition to lack of early deaf education options, the problem had also formed due to the lack of early hearing testing, which has changed over the years as technology and awareness of the need has improved, Pride continues.

"Happy Hands works with local agencies in identifying hearing loss as early in life as we can. That way we are finding these children when they are very young, often between two and six months, instead of at four years old when they've already begun to develop behavioral issues," she says.

Once Proo received his answer to why many deaf individuals dealt with illiteracy, Proo surveyed the situation. "I concluded that we needed to do something about this," he says.

Thus, on Sept. 1, 1994, he and his wife opened Happy Hands, with the mission of providing learning and language to children up to six years old.

"We do whatever we have to do to get children to communicate," says Proo.

Pride joined the school in 1997 as program manager, bringing with her 15 years of experience as a public school deaf education teacher.

With her background, Pride was able to help the nonprofit organization transition from a licensed child care center to a fully accredited school and expand its offerings to include kindergarten-aged children.

Happy Hands offers infant, toddler, preschool and kindergarten programs, before and after school care, and speech and language therapy.

"No one else in the state is doing what we're doing," says Proo. "Happy Hands is here to eliminate deaf illiteracy."

In May 2010, Happy Hands moved from its previous location, a 1,600-square-foot house at 32nd Street and Hudson

Avenue, into a 22,000-square-foot facility at 8801 S. Garnett Rd., thanks to a $6.8 million grant from the Donald W. Reynolds Foundation.

Since we were building our facility, "we had the opportunity to tailor the building to our students' needs," says Pride. That included providing the proper lighting and using certain colors that are easy on students' eyes, creating separate therapy rooms, using building materials that provide good acoustics to benefit students who are not deaf, and making the building accessible with ramps and wide hallways for students with various disabilities.

Happy Hands currently has a one-year waiting list; it reached full capacity last year, with approximately 66 full-time students and a few part-time students.

Happy Hands, however, is not focused solely on its students. The school also provides services for families and parents to help them move past their child's "disability" into acceptance, Pride says.

Once that occurs, parents can begin to learn how to communicate with their child.

"When a parent can't communicate with their child, that child is isolated unless the parent learns his/her language," Pride says. "We help the parent give the child language."

Happy Hands also accepts the siblings of deaf or hard of hearing students into their program.

"Often, it's the hearing child who helps the parent turn the corner in learning sign language," she says.

For the future, Pride expects to see Happy Hands' program offerings grow to include various therapy and child care services all in one location in order to provide easy accessibility for their students and their families.

"Our goal is that at Happy Hands, we educate the child, nurture the family and build hope," says Pride.

Happy Hands is currently offering free tours that are open to the public. Tours are one hour and come with a complimentary lunch. Visit happyhands.org for more information, or call 918-893-4800.

Tulsa Native Makes Her Broadway Debut

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

"I knew she was going to be a star," Barbara Terry said, in reference to a pre-teen Rachael Ferrera.

Terry's daughter and Ferrera grew up together, and Ferrera's natural charisma was all too easy to see, according to Terry.

Ferrera, a 2005 Union graduate, went on to attend and graduate from New York University in 2009.

In July, she had her Broadway debut in Amazing Grace. She started working with the show's development in 2010. "The production has been a huge part of my career," she says.

In promotion of Amazing Grace, in August, she appeared with some of her fellow castmates on The Tonight Show with Jimmy Fallon.

Since first arriving in New York, Ferrera has also worked around the country in regional theater productions, including performing her dream role of Sarah in Ragtime, and won a best lead actress award at the 2014 Planet Connections Theatre Festivity in New York City.

These accomplishments make it all the more surprising, then, that Ferrera began pursuing drama only a year before she graduated high school.

Yet, as Terry's earlier comments attest, Ferrera's light had already begun shining many years earlier.

Ferrera's first brush with performing came at her church's talent show when she was three years old.

"I told my parents that I wanted to sing at the talent show," she says. "I guess they thought I would be nervous so they had the stage manager go out on stage with me when it was time to perform."

"I remember looking up at him, thinking, 'Why are they sending this guy on stage with me?'"

The other thing that Ferrera remembers about that performance was her feeling afterward.

"I loved it," she says.

Though, as Ferrera grew up, drama did not take center stage in her life until 2004 when she accompanied her friend to an audition for the Wizard of Oz. Ferrera auditioned as a way to provide moral support and walked away as the understudy for Dorothy.

While she never got the opportunity to assume that role on stage, the time she spent preparing for the role was enough to draw her in.

Then, she approached Union High School drama teacher Troy Powell who encouraged her to pursue improvisation and drama classes.

During her senior year at Union, Ferrera played Maria in Westside Story, and "that's when I knew this was what I wanted to do," she says.

"It lit me up in a way that I never had felt before. I felt like 'I have to do this.'"

She is able to sum up why in two reasons:

"It's fun to go inside of a character and experience life from a different perspective."

However, it's the outward experience of the exchange with the audience that made the biggest impact on her.

"To be able to have a shared experience with the audience, being able to touch them and to be touched by them is amazing. It's an energy in the room; it feels like a bridge, a coming together," says Ferrera.

When she began applying for college, she stuck with her original plan to apply to Ivy League colleges with the intention of studying psychology and music. However, she also applied to NYU as her one theater option.

Once she was accepted, the full realization of what she was about to do set in.

"I was frightened to go to NYU. Here, I just started theater a year ago, and now I was going to be in class with all of these kids who'd been doing theater their whole lives," she says.

Yet, Ferrera pushed through her nerves. "I realized that I just had to focus on one thing at a time and stop focusing on my peers."

While Ferrera has accomplished a number of notable achievements thus far, it was her appearance on The Tonight Show that really hit home for her.

"Appearing on that show was a tangible realization that my dream was coming true. It showed me that so much is possible, and this is only the beginning."

Ferrera's recognition as best actress in 2014 at the Planet Connections Theatre Festivity in New York City came about through a production called The Lost, written by Keelay Ditson, also a Union graduate.

"Keelay was the one who encouraged me to apply to NYU," Ferrera says.

Ferrera played three different characters: a teenage girl, a boy and a mother. The play used spoken word poetry and was nominated for upwards of 10 awards.

After Amazing Grace closed in October, Ferrera headed to Massachusetts where she was invited to help with the development of a new production, called Bella: An American Tall Tale. "I love doing new works and helping to develop original, new characters," she says.

The production is part of the Sundance Institute Theatre Lab – the same Sundance as the Sundance Film Festival.

For the future, Ferrera plans to continue her work in the industry, with hopes of one day entering television or movies.

"Performing is a passion for me," she says. "It's all about giving and receiving love. That's why I'm drawn to art because of its ability to touch people."

"We got our four kids TTCU accounts because we wanted them to have that friendly, local feeling. I like when I go into my branch that people know who I am. They care. They ask about my kids or what I'm doing. And it seems I always see the same people, they're not changing all the time."

"Right now when you open a TTCU checking account, they'll give $50 to you and to your favorite school. I really like that they help our schools and that they're not-for-profit. Simple, unfussy...that's my unbank."
