Here we are again, just a few days before another local, state, and national election, and we still have not heard a lot which addresses our civil rights when it comes to the growing violence between the police and Blacks and other minorities. We haven't heard much about why Jim Crow has been allowed to resurface in our communities with such a vengeance. Why have certain of our elected officials upheld this action at a time when society ought to have moved past

FIFTY CENTS

AN ANALYSIS

Why many believe whoever wins N.C. wins the presidency

BY CASH MICHAELS
OF THE WILMINGTON JOURNAL

No matter which newspaper you read, or which news cable channel you listen to, the consensus seems to be the same - whoever wins North Carolina in next Tuesday's hotly contested Presidential election wins the Presidency.

The Tar Heel State is considered such a crucial battleground because it has awarded Democrats and Republicans each a Presidential victory since 2008, and the most recent statewide polls between Republican Donald Trump and Democrat Hillary Clinton are so tight going into the November 8th general election that it is considered a bellwether for the rest of the nation.

"North Carolina is a very purple state," NC Congresswoman Renee Ellmers (R-NC-2) told CNN. "I know sometimes it gets lumped into the category of a 'red state,' but it really isn't. It's very diverse, and the population and the demographics are changing."

The State is home to 40 percent registered Democrats, 30 percent registered Republicans, and 30 percent registered unaffiliated voters. It is home to hot controversies like the House Bill 2 law, which many see as denying transgender citizens their civil rights, controversial police shootings, and the overturning of the State's voter suppression law, which the US Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals recently dismantled, saying that the Republican-led law targeted African-American voters with "surgical precision."

Indeed, the Tar Heel State is home to many of the liberal versus conservative public policy battles that seem to embody the larger controversies in the nation today.

There's no question that the Clinton and Trump campaigns see North Carolina as a much sought-after 15-electoral-vote jewel on the road to 270. Hardly a week has gone by since September when there hasn't been either a Clinton or Trump surrogate, if not the candidates themselves, campaigning from one end of the State to the other. Just Wednesday of this week, President Obama made his third campaign visit to stump for his former secre-

NC NAACP sues three counties alleging voter suppression

BY CASH MICHAELS
OF THE WILMINGTON JOURNAL

The NC NAACP is suing three counties in federal court alleging that they are illegally cancelling voter registrations because of alleged changes in addresses, in violation of the federal National Voter Registration Act (NVRA). With less than a week before the Nov. 8th general election, and with early voting ending on Nov. 5, voting rights advocates are calling the alleged practice yet another attempt at black voter suppression.

The civil rights organization filed both a lawsuit and an application for a temporary restraining order in the US District Court for the Middle District for North Carolina against the state Board of Elections on Monday. At press time, a hearing was scheduled for federal court in Winston-Salem Wednesday.

Judges Eagles and Stephens run for the NC Court of Appeals

BY CASH MICHAELS
OF THE WILMINGTON JOURNAL

Two veteran jurists are vying for the NC Court of Appeals, promising to vigorously, but fairly, uphold the law if elected.

Wake County District Court Judge Margaret Eagles has presided over civil, criminal and family court cases, in addition to serving as one of two judges in the Abuse, Neglect and Dependence Courtroom. She is also the lead Domestic Violence judge in Wake County.

The daughter of former NC Appellate Court Chief Judge Sidney Eagles, Margaret Eagles, an alum of Needham Broughton High School, Wake Forest University and Campbell University School of Law, didn't intend originally to study law. "I enjoyed doing volunteer work and helping those who were less fortunate. Then, after working as a loan officer at the State Employee's Credit Union, I knew that the best way I could continue to serve the hard working people of North Carolina was through the practice of law."

Eagles started her legal career as a judicial clerk for Justice George Wainwright on the NC Supreme Court, working on appeals in criminal and civil cases. As an Assistant Attorney General, she represented the state in environmental enforcement litigation and in criminal appeals in the NC Court of Appeals. In private practice, Eagles was a civil litigator, handling numerous jury trials in District and Superior Courts.

National Black Voter Poll shows education, economy, and race relations shape strong preference for Hillary Clinton among Black American voters

BY NNPA NEWSPAPER SERVICE

(WASHINGTON, DC.) With the election only days away, a new national poll shows that Black American voters overwhelmingly plan to vote for Hillary Clinton as their choice for President of the United States. Their choice is influenced by concerns about high quality, affordable education, income inequality, jobs, the economy, race relations and racial justice.

The National Black Voter Poll found a high degree of engagement by registered black voters in the election, with 96% of respondents saying they will cast ballots. The same number said their friends also intend to vote. Nearly all respondents in the survey said they voted in both the 2008 and 2012 elections.

Taken together, the data predict a high voter turnout among Black American voters in the November 8, 2016 election and a strong preference for Hillary Clinton over Donald Trump.

A substantial majority (89%) indicated they will vote for Clinton, and two-thirds (67%) said they strongly favor Clinton. Another 23% declared "moderate support" for her. A slightly higher percent (74%) said they have "overall favorable feelings" for Clinton, compared to 2% who said they had favorable feelings for Trump.

When asked "Do you think Donald Trump is a racist?" 84% responded, "Yes."

In contrast to feelings toward the current election year's candidates, 90% of respondents said they have

"overall favorable feelings" toward President Barack Obama.

Findings are based on a national random sample of more than 900 voters from 22,000 telephone calls made between October 21 and 30, 2016 by researchers in a joint National Newspaper Publishers Association - Howard University poll. This was the first national-level scientific study focused exclusively on voters who identify as African American, Afro-Hispanic or other black identity.

The goal of the research was to develop a profile of Black American voters in a year when race is believed to be a defining factor in the outcome of presidential and congressional races.

The vast majority of respondents in the survey identified as Democrats. To the question "In general, do you think of yourself as Democrat, Republican, or something else?" 82% of respondents said "Democrat" and only 2% said Republican. Another 16% said they are either "Independent" or "Other" (9% and 7%, respectively).

A large majority of respondents (87%) identified high quality education as an influence in their decisions, and a nearly equal percent (84%) pointed to concerns about college affordability as a factor.

Other concerns shaping decisions were the economy and jobs (85%), race relations and racial justice (84%), and income inequality (82%).

When asked about where they obtain their information about political candidates, nearly half (46%) said from local TV news, and another fourth (24%) said from cable stations. Approximately a fifth (18%) said they rely on black newspapers for information about elections.

Revelations of new FBI probes into Hillary Clinton's emails occurred in the midst of the research, prompting researchers to compare participant responses to candidates before and after this news. They found that favorable feelings toward Clinton rose slightly and those toward Trump were cut in half.

The sample of more than 900 registered black voters was 70% female and 30% male. When considered alongside the 96% who said they voted in the previous two elections and also plan to vote on Nov. 8, black women show they are at the forefront of social change and political history in the United States, by voting to elect the nation's first black and now its first female president.

A majority of respondents said they had attended college (73%), and were 56 years of age or older. Millennials between the ages of 18-35 accounted for 11% of the sample.

Those surveyed were nearly equally split between employed and not-employed (53% and 47%, respectively). Of those employed, 30% said they were federal employees, and 18% said they were union members. Of those not employed, 78% were retired and 22% were unemployed. Nearly half (48%) of respondents said they are married and most (84%) have a religious affiliation (a strong majority of those Christian). The research was conducted using social science survey methods at Howard University. Research findings, however, do not necessarily reflect the personal views of the researchers, the faculty or administration of Howard University, or the members of the National Newspaper Publishers Association.

Principal investigators on the interdisciplinary Howard research team included Dr. William Spriggs, Department of Economics; Dr. Terri Adams and Dr. Rubin Patterson, Department of Sociology and Criminology; Dr. Lorenzo Morris, Department of Political Science; and Dr. Carolyn Byerly, Department of Communication, Culture and Media Studies. Principal liaisons from the NNPA included President and CEO Dr. Benjamin Chavis, and Chairman of the Board Denise Rolark Barnes.

SUING

According to the application for a restraining order put forth by the NC NAACP's attorneys, the NVRA "...protects Americans' fundamental right to vote by...requiring that states meet certain requirements before cancelling a voter's registration on the basis of a change in residence. Specifically, states must either (1) receive written confirmation from the voter that he or she has moved to a different residence outside the county, or (2) send a prescribed notice to which the voter fails to respond, and then wait for two years as a sexual offender, but he was not fired from his job that would cause him to work with children and in public places.

Considering all the we supposedly governing this kind of discrimination, why is it that this type of activity still exists? Why is it still happening and why is it that people think oppression will work here? There will never be slavery again in Brunswick County or elsewhere in these United States of America. God has given us education and knowledge of the truth. Even if we try to overlook the truth, it keeps coming out and rising to the top! The truth will set you free!!

federal election cycles in which the voter does not vote. Only after written confirmation, or notice, no response, and the two-cycle waiting period, may a state proceed with removal from the voter registration rolls.

The application continued, "The NVRA also protects access to the franchise by prohibiting any systematic program to remove voters from the rolls within 90 days of a federal election."

The NC NAACP alleges that the boards of Elections (BOEs) in Moore County, Beaufort County and Cumberland County "...have cancelled thousands of voters' registrations on the basis of an alleged change in residence. Those purges of voter rolls resulted from proceedings that were triggered by challenges filed by private individuals, based on a single mailing returned as undeliverable. In most cases, these cancellations of registrations were supported by no other evidence and none were supported by written confirmation from the voters of any alleged change in residence or compliant with the NVRA's notice and waiting-period provisions. In many cases, the North Carolinians purged from voting rolls through these proceedings still reside at the addresses where they are registered, or have moved within the same county and remain eligible to vote there. Nonetheless, single items of returned mail have resulted in cancellation of their registrations," the complaint states.

And it has been determined that the majority of voters being removed from the county election rolls are African-Americans. At least 4500 voters have been purged, 3900 of them in Cumberland County alone.

The state Board of Elections counters that those local boards are following state statutes that authorize private citizens to challenge voter registrations on the basis of returned mailings. The state BOE confirms that "...thousands of voters have been challenged in the past three months on the basis of returned mail..." The NC NAACP is not only asking for a temporary restraining order to immediately stop the local BOEs from purging black voters before the Nov. 8th general election, but also a permanent injunction to restore the voting registrations of all of those purged.

tary of state. Last week, his wife, First Lady Michelle Obama, made an electrifying joint appearance with Clinton in Winston-Salem.

"It's a must-win," Eric Trump, the GOP candidate's son, told a Charlotte television station in August. "It's a place we're going to spend a tremendous amount of time."

Meanwhile both Trump and his vice presidential running mate, Indiana Gov. Mike Pence, have made multiple visits to North Carolina over the past two weeks alone, and with good reason. The Republican Party is strong in North Carolina, and throughout presidential electoral history, it has been reliably conservative in electing the top of the ticket by wide margins, that he was surprised that a magazine about guns didn't put a bulls-eye over Hillary Clinton's face. Burr, who is running for re-election in a tight race against Democratic challenger Deborah Ross, issued an apology only after a recording of his remarks were sent to CNN and broadcast. "The comment I made was inappropriate, and I apologize for it, Burr said in a statement.

GOV. MCCRORY RELENTS, SAYS HE WILL CALL A SPECIAL SESSION FOR MATTHEW NEEDS

[RALEIGH] Amid weeks of cajoling from leading Democrats that a special session of the state legislature has to be called to deal with the mounting costs of Hurricane recovery in the aftermath of Hurricane Matthew, Gov. Pat McCrory is finally on the same page with his critics that the $12-18 million currently in the state disaster relief fund is hardly enough to help citizens who've suffered through flooding, high winds and loss of their homes and businesses in over 40 counties. McCrory says he'll call the special session next month, and will also ask the federal government and Congress to provide relief funding.

OVER THREE WEEKS SINCE HURRICANE MATTHEW, 250 STILL IN SHELTERS

from Richard Nixon in 1968, to George W. Bush in 2004, the only detour being in 1976 when peanut farmer and Georgia Governor Jimmy Carter, a Democrat, temporarily broke the North Carolina mold.

President Barack Obama's 14,777-vote squeaker over John McCain in 2008 created shockwaves, showing that a progressive Democrat could win in the South again with the right coalition of African-Americans, young people and women. In 2012, President Obama lost North Carolina to Republican Mitt Romney by just 100,000 votes statewide, though he won re-election overall. While the Black vote turned out in strong numbers, a dip in Obama's White voter support created the North Carolina deficit.

However, observers noticed subtle changes to the State's voting population, even though the Republicans were in command of the governorship and the State Legislature. North Carolina's urban centers of Charlotte, Greensboro and Raleigh were growing with more moderate and progressive out-of-state residents, while the State's mostly rural enclaves were shrinking in population. Democratic strategists saw the population shift as something they could exploit, while Republicans surmised that rural and small town voters, who tend to be older and more conservative, in eastern North Carolina particularly, were dependable enough to stay in the fold.

Thus, we've seen the Trump campaign focus on areas like Kinston, Wilmington, and Greenville, while Hillary Clinton has focused on cities like Charlotte, Raleigh and Winston-Salem to draw college students, African-Americans, and, of course, women. Each campaign is vying to cultivate where it thinks North Carolina strength is.

The result - polls in the last several months that have shifted back and forth between Trump and Clinton, illustrating a phenomenon analysts believe is still happening. North Carolina is becoming more of a mid-Atlantic state like Maryland, and less of a southern state like South Carolina. Thus, the tension that many analysts suggest makes North Carolina a must-watch state on election night.

"North Carolina could be the state where the Presidential contest has the biggest effect on down-ballot elections, influencing key races from U.S. Senate to governor and other critical races that could dramatically change the political direction of the State," states the online magazine Facing South. "What makes North Carolina unique in 2016 is the number of close races where coattails from the Presidential election could tip the balance. For example, North Carolina is the only state in which races for President, U.S. Senate and governor are all rated "toss-ups" by the Cook Political Report."

Add to that the fact that, so far, North Carolina's early voting numbers, since Oct. 20, show Democrats turning out in larger numbers than Republicans (Black female Democrats lead all other Democratic groups), but Republicans are expected to dominate on Nov. 8, and it's anybody's guess who will win the State. The latest Elon University poll issued Tuesday shows the race too close to call between Clinton and Trump in North Carolina at 42 percent each. If there is one bit of encouraging news for Democrat Clinton, however, it's that, according to the polls, her support among African-Americans was solid, with 100 percent saying that she has their vote over Trump.

Blacks are 2 of 10 voters in North Carolina, while Whites are 7 of 10, according to the most recent US Census figures.

President Obama comes back to North Carolina again on Friday to campaign for Hillary Clinton in Fayetteville and Charlotte. Civil rights hero, Congressman John Lewis [D-GA] campaigns for Clinton in Charlotte today.

Among the many judges Judge Eagles admires most are former NC Supreme Court Justice Patricia Timmons-Goodson "for her consistent judgment and consummate professionalism," former Judge Martha Geer, and of course, her dad for former Chief Judge Sidney Eagles, "...not only because he is my father and I love him, but because I respect his work on the Court, his true belief in the system and the grace and courtesy he shows to everyone he encounters."

Judge Margaret Eagles takes pride in the work she's done.

"I worked alongside the Administrative Office of the Courts and multiple stakeholders to implement remote electronic filing of complaints for emergency domestic violence protective orders from Interact, our local rape crisis and domestic violence agency. I am the co-chair of the Wake County Domestic Violence Task Force and a member of the Wake County Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team."

"I am dedicated to the rule of law," Judge Eagles says, "am steadfast in my respect to the public trust and committed to impartiality for all who appear before me as a district court judge, and would continue to do so if elected to the NC Court of Appeals. If elected, I would continue to treat all parties in the same manner, regardless of who they are or who represents them."

Judge Linda Stephens is running for re-election to NC Court of Appeals. The first in her family to graduate high school, she is an alum from the University of South Carolina, and earned her law degree from UNC-Chapel Hill.

"I see the law as a great equalizer in society," Judge Stephens says. "The law should treat everyone equally and never discriminate based on some portion of one's identity. In practical life, we all know that there is implicit bias in the law and the way it is applied, but I have always aimed higher than that. I have always worked toward fairness and equality, as promised by our Constitution."

In her long career, Judge

Stephens was named one of the top 50 female attorneys in North Carolina by Super Lawyers Magazine, and listed among the Best Lawyers in America during the last eleven years she was in private practice. She has won numerous awards for her hard work ethic, and has served on the state appellate court for over ten years.

"First, I believe in adhering to my oath of office," she says, "in other words: to uphold the Constitutions of my Country and my State; to uphold the laws of my State when they are consistent with the Constitutions; to follow the law in every case to reach the result the law requires even when that result is different from my personal beliefs. My record indicates I have faithfully adhered to that oath."

Second, over the past 10 years, I have worked collaboratively and cohesively with my colleagues who are from a different political party. Political ideology has never affected my interest in or ability to work with another colleague on the Court of Appeals," Judge Stephens says.

Our Voice

NCBPA / WILMINGTON JOURNAL 2016 GENERAL ELECTION ENDORSEMENTS

The African-American newspapers of North Carolina recognize that this may be the most pivotal national and statewide election in our lifetime. Given the hard work and sacrifice of many in our community to bring about justice and equality, it would be foolish for any of us eligible to vote not to do so for the November 8th election. We've seen the dangerous direction some would like to take this country, and we know how the future of Black America would fare under their leadership.

As black newspapers, we chronicle the history of our communities every day, and are keenly aware of the hopes and dreams of our citizens and readers. So, after careful consideration, the North Carolina Black Publishers Association, of which The Wilmington Journal is a member, recommends the following candidates for your voting consideration, but also reminds you that electing them is not enough.

Our community must also hold all of them accountable for our support. All of the candidates are Democrats. The appellate court candidates are all in separate races.

U.S. PRESIDENT - Hillary Clinton

The former First Lady, US senator and US Sec. of State undoubtedly the knowledge and overall experience to lead the nation during these troubled times.

U.S. SENATE - Deborah Ross

A former state lawmaker, Ross has spent her career advocating for families, civil rights and economic justice. Her election gives a President Hillary Clinton needed support in the US Senate.

GOVERNOR - Roy Cooper

The state attorney general for over the past decade, Cooper believes in fairness for all, attracting new jobs and opportunities, and moving North Carolina forward for all of its citizens.

L.T. GOVERNOR - Linda Coleman

A former state lawmaker, Ms. Coleman has a strong history of advocacy for improving education, helping North Carolina families succeed, and fighting for children.

STATE ATTORNEY GENERAL - Josh Stein

Currently a state senator, Stein formally worked in the AG's office. He believes in protecting the rights of all North Carolina citizens, and upgrading the state's ability to combat crime.

SECRETARY OF STATE -- Elaine Marshall

Ms. Marshall has been re-elected to office for so long (six terms), it's hard to imagine anyone else to lead North Carolina's administration of business records and documents.

STATE TREASURER - Dan Blue III

The son of the first African-American speaker of the House, and current Senate Minority Leader, Dan III has worked on Wall Street, the pharmaceutical industry, and is an attorney handling corporate and small business matters. He has a penchant, like his dad, Sen. Dan Blue, for wanting government to work for its citizens.

The rest of the NC Council of State - incumbents Wayne Goodwin for Insurance Commissioner, State Auditor Beth Wood, and Supt. of Public Instruction June Atkinson, are all deserving of your support. New candidates Charles Meeker (former Raleigh mayor) for Commissioner of Labor, and Walter Smith (former Boonville mayor) for Commissioner of Agriculture are also worthy of your consideration.

NC SUPREME COURT - Judge Mike Morgan

A Superior Court judge with over 26 years of judicial experience, including trying criminal cases, Judge Morgan believes in being a fair jurist, not one with a political agenda.

Matters of Opinion

CASH IN THE APPLE

With less than a week to go, our long, national nightmare will soon be over.

Even though Democrat Hillary Clinton is leading in most polls (though an ABC News/Washington Post poll had her trailing Republican Donald Trump by one on Tuesday), it is safe to assume that Nov. 8th Election Day will be filled with surprises, one way or another.

For instance, here in North Carolina, while the latest Elon University poll out Tuesday sees the presidential race as a virtual dead-heat at 42 percent, a WRAL-TV Survey USA poll has Trump with a substantial 51 to 44 percent lead.

The fact is the polls are all over the place. That means we can all only count on the poll that really matters, and that's how we all really vote.

Trust me, there is a huge difference between someone interrupting your dinner to ask you how you're going to vote, versus you making the effort to take yourself (and significant other) down to the REAL polls, and casting a REAL ballot for whomever you choose.

That leads me to how the news media have covered this presidential election.

It really hasn't been easy to be a reporter covering the ridiculousness of what is supposed to be a dignified exercise in our republic's democracy.

For more than the past year, Trump has turned the political world on its head with beyond borderline pronouncements about Mexicans, muslims, and of course, women.

And then, of course, controversy just seems to follow the name "Clinton," and Lord knows, whether it be about her private email server at home, or alleged double deals at the Clinton Foundation, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has always seemed to be facing new questions about her honesty and integrity that have turned a number of people off, despite her undeniable intellect and political acumen.

So reporters have had to cover two partisan nominees who are intensely disliked, and do so in the most fair and balanced way possible.

The problem has been while

Trump romanced the press to the point where cable stations were just throwing free TV time at the billionaire because more Trump meant higher ratings, we failed to really look into his business and personal dealings until he was well on his way to the White House.

And when something disturbing did crop up, Trump proved to be like Teflon for a while, ducking and weaving earth

shaking controversies with ease.

How many times have you counted Trump out, and he wasn't?

One can say the same for Hillary. The WikiLeaks revelations and the FBI reinvestigation into her private server to determine if she ever mishandled classified information have gnawed at her campaign relentlessly, but she too, kept standing strong. The press was faced with how much to hit her with, and when.

It wasn't easy.

If all of you found yourselves beyond disgusted by all of this, that's completely understandable. The question is, who will be our next president, and will that person be so badly wounded by this controversy-ridden campaign that he/she will be unable to effectively lead?

That's why if you haven't voted already, make it happen. Because even after the election, there will be a lot we'll have to sort through as a nation.

At a time when African-Americans - especially millenniums - should be running even pole-vaulting to the polls because not voting could help shift the race to Donald Trump. But so far this isn't happening. Early voting polling shows a decrease in turnout from 2012.

Perhaps the apparent lack of enthusiasm can be explained because in 2012 President Barack Obama was running for a second term. Nevertheless, it would be awful if blacks sit nonchalantly by without voting their strength to stop a hateful, bigoted move from making America a shame again.

As an African-American woman, I feel only one-half liberated by Obama's election.

With a black man being the world's most powerful leader, I saw the walls of racial caste come tumbling down. The other half of methe female- still yearns to be set free, to believe the glass ceiling is finally been shattered.

Racism and sexism are parts of the same coin. So with all the hell blacks have gone through fighting institutional racism, for the life of me, I can't see why we aren't the first to rush to the polls in defense of Clinton after seeing how the deck is stacked against her. Even Obama and husband Bill admitted that she is more qualified for the presidency than either of them when they ran.

When South Carolina Rep.

Joe Wilson yelled, "You lie!" at Obama during a joint session of Congress and when Trump pushed the birther movement

trying to deny Obama's USA birth status, my spirit sank.

Now as I see Hillary whipped worse than a battered wife or a downtrodden slave and watching the parade of women accusing Trump of sexual assault my spirit is down in the dumps again.

Hillary's treatment is unprecedented and unfair.

Here we have the FBI, some high-rolling Republicans along with the Russians who Trump speaks so well of and reportedly has business interests with teaming up to bring

Clinton down with hacked emails that only maliciously

target Trump and seem oblivious to the many shady deals of Donald Trump.

I need convincing that somehow Trump or one of his billionaire friends did not slide millions over to FBI director James B. to write a well-crafted letter of innuendo that slammed Clinton without producing any facts against her. It is also incredible that Comey could get so hot to trot over investigating what could be on the computer of disgraced former Congressman Anthony Weiner, whose wife is Clinton's top aide, but say

Our stories, our truth: Loving

(Via TriceEdneyWire.com)

In my first year of law school, I learned about the case, Loving v. Virginia. Having grown up in the south, the case didn't surprise me. A three-tiered system was 'normal' in my home state of Louisiana. We had Black people, white people and mulattoes. Each rarely married outside of their own group. My family is multi-racial, so our arrangement seemed perfectly normal, although we certainly understood that many others didn't agree.

Loving v. Virginia was fascinating because this case did not originate in the Deep South, but in a state many considered to be advanced in race relations. Little did we know!

A movie about the case will be in theaters soon, and, if you are in doubt about what real love is, this movie shows

Mildred Jeter, the 17 year

you. When you look at all of the hate and the continuing bigotry that is so prominent in the current presidential election, it's easy to understand the significance of the mantra Love Trumps Hate!

Like the hoards of the ghostly that flood our consciousness during Halloween or in horror movies, racial hatred and intolerance seem to re-emerge from sinister recesses of our culture. In part, we've made this possible with attitudes of self-satisfaction and contentment. The Struggle continues and, in reality, has never ended. Thinking they have made it, too many have closed a blind eye to the indignities that our enemies are still willing to heap upon us. Lest we forget, it is through our struggles that we gain our victories, and once we are victorious, we must guard our gains or lose them.

Without divulging the details of Loving v. Virginia, it's a story about interracial marriage and true love. More than coincidentally, the real name of the subject couple was Loving!

old Black female subject of the movie, had the kind of determination we so often see in Black women. Denied a place to live in Virginia, Mildred had to leave the state. Instead of giving up and committing 'emotional suicide,' Mildred stood firm in her resolve. Like most of us, she did not overcome by herself. Through the generosity of another strong, Black woman character, Mildred, her husband and children were given long-term shelter - a place to call home - in the home of another woman. Although the story is principally about romantic love and marriage, consistent with the values that most Black women embrace, another Black woman showed agape love.

Black women have always had a lot with which to contend, but a significant part of our story-our truth is that we, more often than not, tend to be thoughtful, to practice unconditional love and communal compassion. We are our sisters' keeper! We are our brothers' keeper. We are the care-givers and nurturers of our children. Historically, we have prioritized our focus on our families and friends and subordinated our own interests for an altruistic, greater good. We have never been the exclusive beneficiaries of our own advocacy. That's what makes us so special. Our stories are rich and have yet been fully told.

The movie Loving provides a glimpse of how a Black woman, motivated by love, can move a nation! As Dr. Dorothy Height always reminded us, "We Black women don't always do what we want to do, but we always do what we have to do."

Now, as we approach Election Day, the strength of our character is being tested again. Like Michelle Obama, we are being asked to "pull the fat out of the fire." Our consistent voting and turnout are being relied upon to provide the margin of victory in political contests across our nation. As in all things, we ARE up to the task.

TO BE EQUAL Ohio bus tour encourages voters of color to head to the polls

(Via TriceEdneyWire.com)

"I f I hear anybody saying their vote does not matter, that it doesn't matter who we elect -- read up on your history. It matters. We've got to get people to vote. I will consider it a personal insult -- an insult to my legacy -- if this community lets down its guard and fails to activate itself in this election. You want to give me a good sendoff? Go vote." - President Barack Obama

New voter I.D. requirements. Early voting cutbacks. Limitations on absentee voting.

When overall Black voting rates reached parity with white rates in 2012, many state lawmakers wasted no time passing new discriminatory voter suppression restrictions aimed at driving down Black voter turnout. The Supreme Court's decision in Shelby County v. Holder, which struck down a key provision of the Voting Rights Act, opened the door for Black voter suppression.

With confusing new statutes on the books for the first time in a Presidential election, the National Urban League and other civil rights groups took to the road to educate and encourage voters, starting with the state of Ohio. Last weekend's "Our Vote Matters" bus tour took us to Cleveland, Akron and Canton, to schools and churches and community centers. We knocked on doors, visited barber shops and beauty shops, and spread our message across the airwaves.

We were joined on this important mission by the National Action Network, the National Coalition on Black Civic Participation, led by Melanie Campbell and Show Your Power, led by activist Moses Boyd. Reality star and entrepreneur Chanita Foster and R&B singer Nicci Gilbert lent their considerable talents to spread the word, supported by the millennial media movement Revolution Nation.

We were inspired by the enthusiasm we found along the way - many voters we encountered had already taken advantage of early voting in Ohio, and others were looking forward to casting their votes. We educated voters about the need to bring I.D. to the polls, and what forms would be accepted, how to find their polling place and where to get their questions answered.

In Ohio, early voting was slashed by six days, eliminating the opportunity to register and vote on the same day. It is one of 14 states with new voting restrictions in place for the first time in a presidential election. The others are Alabama, Arizona, Indiana, Kansas, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and Wisconsin. The new laws range from strict photo ID requirements to early voting cutbacks to registration restrictions.

The states most likely to pass new voting restrictions were those with the highest African-American turnout in 2008, those with the highest Hispanic population growth between 2000 and 2010, and those formerly covered under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act. Section 5 required states with a history of racially-motivated voter suppression to seek pre-clearance from the federal government before changing any voting rules.

If Trump were talking about these realities, maybe he'd deserve a hearing. Instead, he's braying about the same media that helped him reach where he is today. We deserve a unified, national electoral system that guarantees every citizen a protected right to vote, the most fundamental right of all in a democracy.

#VotingWhileBlack Digital Campaign seeks to mobilize African-American voters

BY ZENITHA PRINCE
THE AFRO AMERICAN NEWSPAPER

(TriceEdneyWire.com) - Color Of Change, which bills itself as the nation's largest online racial justice organization, has kicked off #VotingWhileBlack, a digital campaign meant to mobilize African-American voters to flood the polls on Election Day.

Launched under the banner of the organization's political action committee, the campaign seeks to rally Black voters behind specific candidates based on their stances on issues central to the Black community such as police violence, criminal justice reform and the lack of investment in Black schools and communities.

"This is a truly unprecedented program that's laser-focused on mobilizing Black voters around the issues that matter most to our community," Color Of Change PAC spokesman Rashad Robinson said in a statement. "Down ballot races, like those for district attorneys, often don't get much attention. But, we know all too well how much the perspective and practices of these local prosecutors impact Black communities. Rather than shoving these races to the sidelines, #VotingWhileBlack puts them front and center in our voter outreach—and we're doing so by engaging our communities not on the basis of political parties, but based on building independent political power that will be around after the election to hold those we support accountable. We're translating the presence and visibility of our issues into the power to change the rules." The initiative is being powered by activities such as text-a-thons, which have been hosted by partners that include entertainment star John Legend, National Nurses United, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority and Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. The campaign also reaches out to voters via e-mail drives and digital ads and provides online voting tools.

The PAC's leaders said the goals of the campaign go way beyond Nov. 8.

"A key part of our program is holding politicians accountable after Election Day," said Arisha Hatch, Director of Color Of Change PAC. "For far too long, elected officials have pursued Black folks' votes, but then failed to champion our issues once they're in power. We're mobilizing Black communities to vote strategically, shape political agendas, move the needle on key issues, and ultimately hold elected officials accountable for the promises they make at election time."

Studies show that Black voters and other voters of color are having an increasing impact on elections. According to the Center for American Progress, at least 30 percent of eligible voters heading to the polls this November are people of color. And, Black women voters are expected to be particularly important: In 2012 and 2008, African-American women turned out to the polls at the highest rate of any group; four years ago, for example, 74 percent of eligible voters among this group helped power President Obama to a second term in office.

Felony disenfranchisement will keep many Blacks from voting

BY FREDERICK H. LOWE
NORTHSTARNEWSSTODAY.COM

(TriceEdneyWire.com) - With the 2016 Presidential election around the corner on November 8th, The Sentencing Project is reporting that 6.1 million individuals will be prohibited from voting because of felony convictions and most of them are African American.

"One in 13 African Americans of voting age is disenfranchised, a rate more than four times greater than that of non-African Americans," reports The Sentencing Project, a Washington D.C.-based organization that promotes a fair and effective U.S. Justice System. "Over 7.4 percent of the adult African American population is disenfranchised compared to 1.8 percent of the non-African-American population."

The Sentencing Project noted that in Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia, disenfranchisement rates vary significantly by state. Battleground Florida

In Florida, a battleground state in November's election, where Republican Donald Trump is currently leading Democrat Hillary Clinton, 21 percent of African Americans are disenfranchised. Not all African Americans will vote for Clinton but most blacks are Democrats. In Florida, the Sunshine State, it's nothing but stormy weather for ex-cons. Nearly 1.5 million individuals are disenfranchised or 48 percent of the national total. In Kentucky, 26 percent of blacks are disenfranchised; in Tennessee, 21 percent are disenfranchised and in Virginia, the cradle of the Confederacy, 22 percent are disenfranchised.

Felony disenfranchisement rates

Felony Disenfranchisement rates vary from less than .5 percent in Massachusetts, Maryland, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, and Utah. It is zero percent in Maine and Vermont to more than 7 percent in Alabama, Florida, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee and Virginia.

In April, Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe restored voting rights for 206,000 ex-offenders, but the Virginia Supreme Court in a 4-3 decision issued in June ruled that McAuliffe did not have the authority to make such a proclamation. In August, Gov. McAuliffe said his office will issue voter restoration orders on an individual basis to Virginians who have compleed their sentences starting with 13,000 residents who had their registrations cancelled.

In a report titled "6 Million Lost Voters: State-Level Estimates of Felony Disenfranchisement, 2016," The Sentencing Project reported felony disenfranchisement has grown with the expansion of U.S. penal system.

In 1976, 1.176 million people were banned from voting because of felony convictions. In 2016, the number rose to 6.1 million.

Some are expecting us to stay home on Election Day...Let's prove them wrong

BY GLYNDA C. CARR AND KIMBERLY PEELER-ALLEN

(TriceEdneyWire.com) - With a few days left until Election Day some are speculating what the overall turnout will be among Black women.

Black women were among the most active voters in the 2008 and 2012 elections. In fact, Black women make up 6.3 percent of the total U.S. voting age population, but represented 9 percent of the 2012 and 2014 electorate due to their higher voter turnout.

Over the past several election cycles, Black women have demonstrated that their robust involvement is an absolutely essential foundation of any winning coalition.

Black women's participation in the last two Presidential elections transcended just showing up at the polls and voting. A closer look at our involvement reveals that voting was just the beginning. The Obama for America strategy provided meaningful tools of engagement - from hosting house parties to organizing virtual phone banks and door-knocking opportunities.

The effectiveness of the campaign's engagement, investment and tailored messaging resulted in a surge in Black women's overall engagement. That participation has not only expanded the electorate of first-time voters, but it has also mobilized a record number of first-time political donors and bundlers.

This crucial post-Obama bridge election presents a movement-building opportunity designed for and by Black women, independent of any particular candidate.

The 2016 election provides an opportunity to harness Black women's power by turning out the vote. Furthermore, it gives us the opportunity to leverage that voting strength into the power to shape and inform political debates from equal pay and affordable health care to reproductive rights and community safety.

This November's election results will be determined in large part by the turnout rates among Black women. There are several factors to consider this cycle: Will Black women voters, many who voted for the first time in 2008 and 2012 return to the polls? Is there an enthusiasm gap among Black women voters? What strategies and messages will motivate Black women's engagement?

Can we activate this critical 2008 and 2012 voting bloc, turn them out to the polls and motivate them to organize their communities? The answer is yes!

The late Shirley Chisholm, once said, "You don't make progress by standing on the sidelines, whimpering and complaining. You make progress by implementing ideas." This statement rings true today and Black women have a pivotal role to play in helping to move the country forward. But, we must activate our networks.

History has demonstrated that when you fire up a Black woman she does not go to the polls alone. She brings her house, her block, her church, her sorority and her water cooler.

According to Nielsen, Black women are one of the largest users of social media.

The #BlackWomenVote campaign is tapping into the organizing power of Black women, encouraging them to raise their voices, cast their votes and show their power.

The campaign is engaging Black women vote this election and to mobilize their networks to the polls. The campaign has tools and resources to help everyday Black women organize their networks from shareable graphics and videos, FaceBook Live events and 'Share Your Vote Story' opportunities.

We need you to flex your power and help us move hundreds of thousands of voters to the polls by November 8th. Join the campaign and help to register your folks to vote, take them to the polls, and discuss the issues and candidates that matter.

Go to www.blackwomentovote.com, where you will find all of the tools, information and planning guides you need to educate yourself and mobilize your network.

Some are expecting us to stay home, let's prove them wrong.

As for-profit college enrollment climbs, Blacks graduate with more debt

Borrowers face over $125 million in unnecessary interest charges

BY CHARLENE CROWELL
NNPA NEWswire
COLUMNIST

With 44 million consumers owing about $1.4 trillion in student loans, a new report by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau finds that student loan servicing and debt collection together will boost borrower costs even higher over the next two years.

The Bureau's recently-released Student Loan Ombudsman Report termed the nation's current system as "flawed" and further calls for an "overhaul" to improve conditions for an approximate 8 million distressed and defaulted borrowers. Its findings and conclusions are based on 5,500 private student loan complaints and approximately 2,300 debt collection complaints filed between October 1, 2015 and May 31, 2016. Since February 2016, 3,900 student loan complaints made concerned loan servicing.

"This report offers further evidence that industry practices and needless red tape can turn a student loan into an unbearable burden," said CFPB Director Richard Cordray. "Policymakers should work to reform the programs that are failing those borrowers that need help most."

Complaints filed with CFPB during this reporting period cite:

- Delays and dead ends when applying for income-driven plans that include interest subsidies and loan forgiveness;

- Problems with debt collectors verifying incomes and in turn assigning incorrect monthly payment amounts;

• Loan servicers billing borrowers hundreds of dollars more per month than was arranged with the debt collector; and

• Conflicting information as to where loan payments should be sent and how those payments would be applied to loan balances.

A few days later, a Brookings' Economic Studies report found severe racial debt disparities for both Black undergrads and those completing graduate college studies.

"The moment they earn their bachelor's degrees, Black college graduates owe $7,400 more on average than their White peers ($23,400 versus $16,000, including non-borrowers)," wrote Judith Scott-Clayton and Jing Li for Brookings.

As an increasing number of Black students enroll at for-profit colleges for either undergraduate or graduate studies, those who borrow loans are also the most likely to incur heavier debt, carry it longer, and default more often.

Not a favorable scenario when time and studies were meant to bring financial security and a higher quality of life.

"While previous work has documented racial disparities in student borrowing, delinquencies and defaults, in this report we provide new evidence that racial gaps in total debt are far larger than even recent reports have recognized," the authors continued, "far larger now than in the past, and correlated with troubling trends in the economy and in the for-profit sector."

Between 2004 and 2008, Brookings noted that Black enrollment at for-profit institutions increased dramatically. During much of these same years, for-profit colleges have faced regulatory scrutiny and quality of education challenges that led to large institutional closings such as Corinthian Colleges and more recently, ITT Technical College that also lost its accreditation.

"[T]he for-profit sector is by far the fastest-growing sector and the only sector that has seen enrollments grow differentially by race," states the Brookings report.

Further, both undergrad and graduate students enrolled at for-profits are more likely to suffer from loan interest accumulating faster than loan payments received, also known as negative amortization.

Earlier this year the Center for Responsible Lending joined with the National Consumer Law Center in calling for the Department of Justice to take actions to ensure racial justice in student loan lending.

"For nearly a decade, the Department of Education has known that student debt impacts borrowers of color differently from white borrowers. Yet in that decade, the Department has failed to take sufficient steps to ameliorate the disproportionately negative impact on borrowers of color, or even to conduct further research to discover the causes or the extent of disparities," wrote the advocates.

"We call on the Department to collect and release the data necessary to learn the true extent of the impact of student debt on communities of color," the coalition continued, "and to work with borrower and consumer advocates to ensure that student loans are a tool for economic advancement and not economic devastation for borrowers of color."

Four years after graduating, nearly half of Black graduates – 48 percent – owe more on their federal undergraduate loans than they did at graduation, says Brookings. By comparison, only 17 percent of White undergrads owed more debt.

Federal law, however, provides some recourse. Borrowers who have defaulted on their student loans are federally guaranteed the right to be given a chance to get out of default and back on track. The process, includes making a series of income-based payments that take into account income and family size.

Secondly, student loan borrowers who have encountered problems with their servicers or related debt collectors can and should bring their concerns to the attention of the CFPB. Complaints may be mailed, faxed or filed online, including all supporting documentation. An advantage to the online filing is that a complaint number will be assigned that enables consumers to check on the status of their complaint at any time.

Beyond the portal to file a student loan complaint, CFPB accepts consumers' questions weekdays from 8am until 8pm Eastern Time at its toll-free number: (855) 411-CFPB (855) 411-2372.

"Federal financial aid policy alone cannot solve these problems," concludes the Brookings report, "but neither can it ignore the challenges facing students of color who disproportionately bear the burden of student debt."

HOMETOWN NEWS FROM BRUNSWICK COUNTY

More technology needed in Brunswick County Schools

We are fighting for improvements in each of Brunswick County's 19 schools and for the building of new facilities. To this end, Brunswick County will be asking taxpaying citizens to approve a bond as soon as possible. The bond focuses on overcrowded classrooms, safety, classroom supplies, technology and private schools. Charter schools are very expensive schools.

The bond should be approved by taxpaying citizens of Brunswick County. The last time citizens of Brunswick County were asked to approve a school bond was in 1999. Teachers are in need of better pay. For this reason, some are going to better paying states. We understand the school bond dollars cannot be used for salary increases for teachers and staff. The benefits from the NC Education Lottery, which runs in the millions annually may be used for capital improvements. The money is currently being used to pay debt service on the new additions at North Brunswick High and Waccamaw K-8 school. More up to date information should be available at all times for taxpaying citizens.

Every day I like to look around and find good things happening in our community and taxes going up. We encourage children to keep up good attendance and good behavior in school, while improving their learning skills as much as possible. Children with good leadership skills must set examples for others to follow.

Today many young African American males, in particular, are high school dropouts and are taking and selling drugs. Overcrowding is one of the main issues today in jails across the country. In some cases, some helpful skills are being taught so that those imprisoned may learn a trade in order to start a new peaceful life upon release from prison. For those who take advantage of such opportunities, once they get out of prison, have an avenue to a better life waiting. In such cases, the help received in prison will be of use for a long time. Good advice for them is to go to the right sources for help and stay away from gangs and other avenues to trouble. Otherwise they will be asking for trouble.

In many ways, hurricane Matthew had a tremendous impact on the lives of children and families, communities, and infrastructure throughout Southeastern NC. Well, In the spirit of giving and helping others, downtown businesses, local service industry, bars and restaurants came together to help raise funds for (WRAAP)Wilmington's Residential Adolescent Achievement Place; an award non-profit "youth" organization in NH County at the 2nd Annual 2016 Wilmington's Bartender's Ball. The 2nd Annual 2016 Wilmington's Bartender's Ball took place at the (downtown) Coastline Convention Center on October 16, 2016, 7pm thru midnight. Event organizers greeted more than 400+ guest who came to the Wilmington's bartender's ball to support the local service industry and (WRAAP) Wilmington's Residential Adolescent Achievement Place.

The semi-formal affair included personal photos, DJ & dancing, bachelor and bachelorette auction, fashion show, & great food samplings and beverages. With a festive atmosphere, there was plenty of laughter and fun to go around, while party goers showed off dance moves on the floor.

The 2nd Annual 2016 Wilmington's Bartenders Ball was a huge hit success. The strong show of support and community involvement amongst the business community; particularly, local service industry and bars and restaurants was tremendous.

Furthermore, the event proceeds provided some much-needed funding to benefit WRAAP, in its efforts, to meet the needs of at-risk children and families; particularly after-school services and community outreach programs in New Hanover County.

After the event, a check in the amount of $4200.00 was presented to (WRAAP) Wilmington's Residential Adolescent Achievement Place.

On behalf of event organizers, we like to thank the local service industry, business community, as well as, sponsors, patrons, and special guest for a spectacular night and monies raised to help benefit WRAAP at the 2nd Annual 2016 Wilmington's Bartender's Ball.

PEOPLE'S CLINIC

Diabetes complications: Reducing your risk and living your best life

Diabetes is the 7th leading cause of death in the United States, and the rates of diabetes are continuing to increase, especially for African Americans. There are an estimated 29.1 million people in the United States with diabetes, and of those more than 8 million are undiagnosed.

Did you know?

- African Americans are up to 2.5 times more likely to develop diabetes compared to whites,

- AA adults are have the faster growing rates of diabetes diagnosis of any race/ethnic group

- AA adults are also more likely to suffer with diabetes complications and to die from the disease

What is Diabetes?

According to the American Diabetes Association (ADA), diabetes is a disease in which the body does not produce or properly use insulin. There are four main types of diabetes: Pre-diabetes, Type 1 (body does not produce insulin, also called juvenile diabetes), Type 2 (body does not use insulin properly, most common type) and Gestational (during pregnancy). Diabetes often goes undiagnosed because many of its symptoms seem so harmless. Symptoms of diabetes can include: frequent urination, excessive thirst, extreme hunger, unusual weight loss, increased fatigue, irritability and blurry vision.

Diabetes increases your risk of many serious health problems, so it is very important to have regular checkups and learn how to best manage diabetes to reduce the risk of complications. Most of us know someone in our family or a friend with diabetes, so educating ourselves about how to live our best lives with the disease helps us all make our communities healthier.

What are the potential complications of Diabetes?

- Kidney Disease - Diabetes is the leading cause of kidney disease in the US. Our kidneys filter our blood to remove waste products, one of which is excess glucose (blood sugar). Due to the high levels of blood sugar often present in persons with diabetes, the kidneys must work harder and as a result can sustain damage. There are treatments, such as diet change and medication, but once the kidneys fail, dialysis is needed. Dialysis is a process by which blood is filtered by machinery outside the body, and persons on dialysis usually require this treatment 2-3 times per week, for a few hours each time.

- Stroke - Stroke is when the blood supply to part of your brain is stopped or interrupted. Persons with diabetes are 1.5 times more likely to have a stroke compared to persons without diabetes. This can be due to damage to the blood vessels, and also the fact that persons with diabetes are more likely to have high blood pressure and/or high cholesterol, which also increase risk for stroke.

- High Blood Pressure (Hypertension) - The ADA states that 2 out of 3 people with diabetes also have high blood pressure (HBP) - blood pressure greater than 120/80 mmHg. The top number is your heart pushing against the artery walls (systolic) and the bottom number is when your heart rests in between beats (diastolic). HBP is when your blood moves with too much force through your vessels, and increases risk of stroke, heart attack, eye and kidney disease. Often, there are no symptoms until damage has already been done.

- Heart Disease - Like stroke and HBP, persons with diabetes are at greater risk of developing heart disease. 2 out of every 3 people with diabetes will die from heart disease or stroke. Since diabetes can damage blood vessels, and as many people with diabetes have other risk factors for heart disease such as high blood pressure, high cholesterol, and obesity, they are more than twice as likely to develop heart disease compared to people without diabetes.

- Eye Disease - Diabetes is the #1 cause of adult onset blindness in the US. The most common eye complications for people with diabetes are glaucoma (pressure in the eye due to blood vessels that do not flow properly), cataracts (clouding of the eye lens that reduces vision) and retinopathy (all disease that affect the retina of the eye). Although these conditions can lead to blindness, with regular eye exams, many people with diabetes can avoid these issues.

- Neuropathy (nerve damage) - Nerve damage reduces your ability to feel pain and/or temperature change, and as a result persons with neuropathy can sustain an injury (feet being the most common) and not be aware until it becomes infected and/or the skin breaks down. Poor circulation (due to blood vessel damage, also known as peripheral artery disease) prevents the body from healing normally, so injuries can worsen quickly and have difficulty healing.

- Lower Limb Amputation - Diabetes is the leading cause of non-traumatic lower limb amputation in the US. Persons with diabetes are much more likely to have a foot or leg amputated due to neuropathy or peripheral artery disease (PAD). In combination, these increase the risk of injury/infection that may result in amputation. About 75,000 lower limb amputations are done on persons with diabetes over the age of 20 every year. However, with regular care and monitoring, these issues can often be prevented or treated early if they do occur.

- Skin Complications - Persons with diabetes are at greater risk for developing multiple skin conditions including infections, rashes, and discolored/raised/irritated skin. Persons with diabetes should have regular skin checks to monitor their skin and treat any issues early.

- Digestive Complications - Persons with both Type 1 and Type 2 diabetes can suffer with a condition called gastroparesis, in which the stomach takes too long to process food/drink. This can make it more difficult to manage blood glucose, because when the stomach contents are finally processed, blood glucose can rise.

- Depression - Persons with diabetes are at greater risk for developing depression, potentially due to stress of daily management of the disease, dealing with diabetes complications, feeling alone from friends/family after diagnosis, lack of access to care, among others. If you are depressed you may not be able to take care of yourself well, which affects blood glucose and in turn increases your risk for complications.

- Dementia - Research suggests persons with diabetes are at greater risk of developing dementia (including Alzheimer's disease), which could be due to multiple factors, including presence of other complications (stroke, high blood pressure) and/or damage to blood vessels that is a result of high blood glucose. There is currently more research ongoing in this area to gain a better understanding of the direct relationship between diabetes and dementia.

- Flu, Pneumonia - Diabetes can weaken your immune system (the part of your body that fights infection) and thus make it harder for you to fight viruses (like the flu) and bacteria. Having the flu can affect your blood glucose and put you at risk for complications like pneumonia. Persons with diabetes should get the flu vaccine every year to reduce their risk of getting the flu and related complications. For the pneumococcal vaccine, one dose may be sufficient, however in some cases a second dose is needed, if so, it should be given 5 years after the first dose. Your healthcare provider can tell you if you need one or two doses.

How can you reduce the risk of complications?

Whether you have Type 1 or Type 2 diabetes, it is essential that you learn how to manage your diabetes, so you can prevent and hopefully avoid complications. It is essential that you make time to talk with your healthcare team about your care, so that you can come up with a treatment plan that will work best for you. It is very important to take an active role in your health care; after all, your well-being is on the line! Important components to managing your diabetes include:

1. Eat a healthy diet. This doesn't mean you can never have sweets again! It simply means that sweets need to be eaten only in moderation, as part of a sensible diet, and combined with physical activity. Limit the amount of calories from fat by eating lean meats, fish or poultry, choosing reduced fat snacks, and cutting back on added fats such as butter or mayonnaise. Limiting the portion sizes of your meals, and eating foods that are high in fiber also helps keep the blood sugar down and gives you that feeling of "fullness" so you can avoid getting too many calories. Eating whole wheat breads, fruits and vegetables and whole grain cereals are the great choices. Limit the amount of salt that you add when cooking and at the table.

2. Get moving and lose excess weight. Physical activity is important for everyone, especially for people with diabetes. Begin and/or maintain an active lifestyle through exercise, by finding ways to be active that are enjoyable for you and your family. A good way to get started is to calculate 5% of your body weight and lose that much. For instance, a person who weighs 200 pounds can lose 10 pounds (5%) to take the first steps in reducing their risk for complications.

3. Follow your doctor's recommendations and monitor other health issues. When diet and exercise are not enough, your doctor may prescribe medications to maintain normal or close to normal blood sugar or insulin levels. It is important to monitor your other health conditions, like high blood pressure, to make sure any issues are found and addressed early.

4. Have regular foot and eye exams. Since diabetes significantly increases the risk of eye disease and injury due to neuropathy/PAD, checking these areas regularly increases the chances of noticing problems and addressing them early.

The Good News: With treatment, proper diabetes management and lifestyle changes, many complications can be prevented. Diabetes does not mean we can't live healthy, enjoyable, active lives; we only have to learn how to live our best lives with diabetes, for ourselves and our loved ones.

Instead of spending quality time with his kids, my son drops them off at my house

Dear Alma,

I need your advice. I love my son with all my heart. He's been a good son and never gave us any problems. He and his girlfriend have lived together for the past five years and they have two children together. They just recently separated and he said it was his choice. He says he should have experienced more in life before settling down with a family. I want to be here to support him in any way that I can. I love my grandchildren and would do anything in the world for them. Here's my problem: for over three months, on my son's visitation weekends he brings his girls over and drops them off with me. I don't want to come off like an ungrateful grandmother, but I don't think this is right. I think he should spend time with them, especially since they don't live together anymore. What do you think, Alma, am I blowing things out of proportion?

Signed,
One Concerned Grandmother

Dear Concerned,

Look Granny, there's one thing I know for sure and that's every woman knows her child. I think you feel like your son is taking advantage of you, and I agree, he is. Clearly, his weekend plans do not include his children. A mother's intuition is better than any radar detector, GPS or Google map app. We know what we know. So what you gonna do about it?

Bringing this to his attention, Me-ma, may not convey the truth you seek. You and I both know he'll deny these actions and accuse you of not wanting to spend quality time with your grands. This is not the case I'm sure, but manipulators are all the same, it's only the names that change. The truth of the matter is, he drops off the kids to you because you let him. So again I ask, what you gonna do about it?

Your question is about him, but my answer is about you. It's time that you deal with your grown up son like the man and father that he is and stop worrying about hurting his feelings. He survived not getting his way when he was five and he will now. The next time he comes by with the children, tell him you're a busy "Glam-Ma" and you're heading out. Nope, the kids can't join you. Do this two or three times, because you need to build up your confidence and not feel guilty about your actions. Stop allowing your son to take advantage of you and disappoint his kids. Real life isn't like a monopoly game, there are "No get out of jail" or responsibility free cards to be won.

Your grandchildren are to be loved, cherished and enjoyed at your convenience and availability, just like everyone else in your life. This situation isn't about you, it's about your son and his accountability as a father.
