New BAPS Superintendent to Take the Helm

STATE OF THE CITY: Broken Arrow City Manager Michael Spurgeon speaks at the Broken Arrow Chamber of Commerce's Annual State of the City Luncheon on Dec. 14. Among Spurgeon's topics were the state's sales tax model, the city's growing infrastructure needs, and future tourism and commercial development opportunities.

NEW SUPERINTENDENT: Dr. Janet Dunlop speaks to reporters after a press conference regarding her role as Broken Arrow Public Schools' Interim Superintendent, to take effect Jan. 3. Dunlop will leave her role as deputy superintendent of assessment and accountability at the Oklahoma State Department of Education.

In his State of the City address on Dec. 14, Broken Arrow City Manager Michael Spurgeon provided an overview of Broken Arrow's recent successes as well as the looming challenges that come with a growing city.

Regarding the city's financial condition, Spurgeon described it as "outstanding," with the city maintaining 10 percent in its emergency reserve fund and holding onto stable bond ratings from Moody's and Standard & Poor's.

However, Spurgeon noted that the two entities raised concerns regarding the city's over reliance on sales tax – a challenge that Spurgeon hopes to see addressed in the coming years.

"The tax model that our cities operate on in Oklahoma doesn't work as well anymore due to changing habits, such as online shopping," he said.

"With our growth, in the coming years, our expenses will outpace revenues. We are talking with other cities about coming up with a tax model that works."

Since becoming city manager in September 2015, Spurgeon has spent much of his time reviewing the city's day-to-day operations and infrastructure conditions.

The city recently completed a street pavement index report, which will serve as a guiding document for maintaining city streets: "Not many cities have this report; it will be a great tool."

"While our streets are better than most in the country, we have to keep them up," Spurgeon continued.

From July 2016-June 2017, the city is spending $70 million in citywide projects, largely including utility work. With 550 lane roads in Broken Arrow, "we need to continue looking at infrastructure."

In line with that constant need, the city is working on creation of a seven-year plan for utility reinvestment.

One infrastructure project currently taking place is in the Rose District, as the city works to complete the fourth and final infrastructure phase, which was a priority, Spurgeon said, when he took over as city manager. The final phase includes streetscaping along Main Street from Dallas to Fort Worth streets.

On Dec. 14, a community forum was held to discuss future Rose District residential development and possible zoning changes to the area. "We want a systematic housing plan for downtown," Spurgeon said.

Regarding commercial development, city officials are maintaining their focus on encouraging growth in south Broken Arrow, including around Warren Theatre, near 121st Street and Aspen Avenue, an area where they expected to have already seen growth by now, Spurgeon noted.

"Every day, we are out there trying to get people to develop in south Broken Arrow and around Warren Theatre."

In September 2017, the Stoney Creek Hotel and Conference Center is expected to open, which "will be a boon to the city," Spurgeon said.

The city's Tourism Assessment is nearing completion, and Spurgeon hopes to use that to determine how to further engage ones who are visiting the conference center. "We want to look at how best to capture those visitors: what do they want to do while they're here, what kind

KUDOS OF THE MONTH: George Kaiser Family Foundation

Since its beginnings, the George Kaiser Family Foundation has impacted countless children and families in greater Tulsa and beyond as well as having brought arts, culture and revitalization to downtown Tulsa.

George Kaiser developed the foundation's primary focus of providing equal opportunity for young children through early childhood evidence-based and experimental educational programs. The reason for the foundation's mission comes from Kaiser's belief that it is unfair and inconsistent with America's founding principles for birth to determine a child's potential.

GEORGE KAISER FAMILY FOUNDATION

A supporting organization of Tulsa Community Foundation

The foundation's three focus areas are Parent Engagement and Early Education, Health and Family Well-Being, and Civic Enhancement.

Over the past decade, major GKFF projects include, in downtown Tulsa's Brady Arts District the construction of Guthrie Green, creation of the Woody Guthrie Center and partnering with Lobeck

Taylor Family Foundation to create 36 Degrees North; acquisition of the Bob Dylan Archive of more than 6,000 items spanning nearly 60 years in partnership with the University of Tulsa; development of the Tulsa Artist Fellowship in 2015; the opening of three Tulsa Educare centers; launch of the Women in Recovery Program; and construction of A Gathering Place for Tulsa, with its first phase to be completed in late 2017.

GKFF's civic ventures are designed to advance its primary mission while also adding to the diversity and vibrancy of the Tulsa area.

ARTS AND CULTURE: In 2011, GKFF purchased the Woody Guthrie Archives from Woody Guthrie Publications in New York, which led to the opening of the Woody Guthrie Center in downtown Tulsa's Brady Arts District in 2013.

GTR Enters 25th Year

UNION BOUNDARY VOL. 1, ISSUE 1

By FORREST CAMERON, Ph.D.
Editor and Publisher

Thanks to our readers, advertisers, my family and all who have contributed in any way to the Greater Tulsa Reporter, we enter our 25th year of publication in 2017.

GTR began as a thought in 1992. Growing up in Tulsa, I loved reading the Tulsa World and Tulsa Tribune (the evening paper).

I was raised from the mid-1950s to the mid-1960s in midtown Tulsa near Edison High School. At that time, the area where the Union School District is today was almost completely rural. Our family moved from Tulsa to Kentucky in 1974 and returned in 1985. When we returned, we purchased a home in the Minshall Park edition in the Union School District. I was immediately amazed how much the Union District had grown in the south and southeast Tulsa and west Broken Arrow areas. It was almost completely full of residential houses and apartments.

Having always been interested in newspapers, I noticed that the Union area was not receiving much targeted news, as it was located in parts of the two cities. I began asking Union residents if they would like to have their own paper. One hundred percent of the people I talked to said yes. So, I decided to publish a paper targeted solely to Union residents. Our first edition, with the front cover above on this page, was published in January 1993. The timing was good as far as news, as a debate was raging over year-round schools. Also, as the headline above states, Highway 169 was opening through 71st Street, resulting in a prediction of a building boom in the 71st Street and Mingo Road area.

As the Union Boundary grew, we decided to expand further into Greater Tulsa. Instead of having one paper and change the Union Boundary name, we decided to continue our target to school district areas and have the papers under the Greater Tulsa Reporter Newspapers banner. The Jenks District Gazette and Midtown Monitor (formerly the Tulsa Free Press) were started in 1995, the Broken Arrow Express and Owasso Rambler began in 1998, and the Bixby Breeze was introduced in 2002.

Keeping up with the times, we went online in 1996, and as far as we know, we were among the first of publications to do so in Greater Tulsa.

Again, thank you Greater Tulsa for 25 years! We are here to serve!

ROSSY GILLE for GTR Newspapers

READY TO LEAD: Mayor G.T. Bynum was sworn in as the 40th Mayor of the city of Tulsa Dec. 5 during a ceremony at Central Library in downtown Tulsa. Bynum was joined by his wife, Susan, and two children, Robert and Annabel.

"I come from a family that believes service as Mayor of Tulsa is the greatest honor in elected public service, and I am so thankful my fellow Tulsans have given me this chance to give it my all in this job," Bynum said.

During his candidacy, Bynum pledged to renew a spirit of high expectations at City Hall, focusing on goals that encourage and shape the next generation of Tulsans. A few areas of focus during his term as mayor will be: education, economic development, government efficiency, public safety and community development.

"We were fortunate to have pioneers with a spirit of high expectations for their hometown, and I am excited to bring that spirit back to the city of Tulsa," Bynum added.

Please see page 4 for Mayor Bynum's first monthly column in this issue of the GTR Newspapers.

TEN PEOPLE TO WATCH IN 2017

G.T. BYNUM

LAURA CHALUS

TONY MOORE

DANIEL SPERLE

KEN CHAPMAN

Greater Tulsa Reporter featured G.T. Bynum as a Person to Watch in 2016 due to his efforts with Vision Tulsa and the Arkansas River Infrastructure Task Force.

Bynum has been named a Person to Watch in 2017 as Tulsa's 40th Mayor, who was sworn into office on Dec. 5.

Bynum is a fifth generation Tulsan with a record of civic service and a family history made up of former mayors.

Bynum ran on the platforms of returning Tulsa to its former status as a nationally-competitive world class city, improving education and the disparity between north and south Tulsa, and improving the city-county relationship.

Bynum convened the city's leaders of early childhood, K-12 and higher education on his first full day in office to form the Mayor's Education Cabinet with the focus on addressing the challenges faced by all education entities citywide.

Bynum's staff includes Chief of Staff Jack Blair; former Mayor Kathy Taylor, chief of economic development; and Nick Doctor, community development and policy chief.

The Tulsa Garden Center announced the appointment of Laura Chalus as executive director in 2016.

Chalus specializes in successful fundraising and project management while bringing an entrepreneurial background to her knowledge, skills, and experience in community relations, non-profit administration, grants management, and database management. Chalus has an interesting challenge to bring the Tulsa Garden Center to its former excellent reputation. In 1957, Tulsa was designated as "America's Most Beautiful City" in an article in Reader's Digest Magazine. Among many attributes about Tulsa, the article cited the beauty of the Tulsa Rose Garden. Unfortunately, the roses were devastated last summer by Rose Rosette's Disease, and weeds filled the space.

Chalus will be working diligently to restore the reputation of the Tulsa Garden Center. Judging by her past experience in motivating volunteers and organizations, Chalus should be an excellent choice to bring the Tulsa Rose garden to its past glory.

A Gathering Place for Tulsa has named Tony Moore park director. In his role, Moore will oversee park operations also for Guthrie Green.

Moore, a native of Jamaica, brings ample experience to Tulsa, previously serving as chief operating officer at the Lowry Park Zoo in Tampa, Florida. Before holding that position, his roles have included corporate director for SeaWorld, director of operations for Discovery Cove and SeaWorld Orlando, director of environmental health and safety for all three SeaWorld Orlando parks, and director of culinary revenue for its water parks. Moore has also held leadership roles in operations at Universal Studios, Florida.

He holds a bachelor's degree in business administration from the University of Central Florida.

A Gathering Place for Tulsa, a project of George Kaiser Family Foundation, is set to open phase 1 in late 2017 along Riverside Drive and the Arkansas River.

The $350-million park will include natural trails, a large green space, recreational water activities and educational programming.

Tulsa Bike Share has named native Tulsan Daniel Sperle executive director of Tulsa Bike Share, a not-for-profit corporation that is partnering with Tulsa Tough in order to bring bike sharing to Tulsa, starting with downtown.

The program, when its first phase launches in spring 2017, will begin to put Tulsa on the national trend of city bike-sharing services. Phase one will be the installation of 12 bike stations all located within the IDL, with a total of 120 bicycles. Phase two will add an additional 12 stations near the University of Tulsa, Cherry Street and Brookside.

Sperle graduated from the University of Oklahoma with every intention of returning to Tulsa: "I wanted to move back after college to be a part of Tulsa's revitalization. I believe this is a pivotal point in Tulsa's development."

Bike Share programs have been shown to increase mobility of local residents and visitors, to more greatly connect neighborhoods, improve health, and increase pedestrian traffic.

Captain Ken Chapman has shown strong leadership in his position with the Salvation Army since he relocated to Tulsa in June 2016. He is very positive about the generosity of the people of his new city, and he has already worked hard in innovative as well as traditional ways to raise funds for people in need.

Though Chapman was raised in a Salvation Army family, he has many years in the private sector. For 20 years, he was president and creative director for Creative Events International and won 22 industry awards as a producer. He was the music producer for the 1996 Atlanta Olympics and executive producer for the Atlanta and Barcelona Paralympics Ceremonies. Chapman also produced the Easter Egg Roll for the Bush Administration at the White House in 2006 and produced Santa's Traveling Workshop, a touring show that brought toys and hope to over 300,000 people affected by hurricane Katrina.

It will be interesting to watch Captain Chapman as he works to raise funds for the less fortunate.

I couldn't have asked for a better experience.

I'm a mom of three boys, so my husband and I were shocked when our doctor told us we were having a girl. I asked several times, 'Are you sure?'

We chose Hillcrest South because it's known for quality, especially in women's services. I absolutely loved my entire birthing experience at Hillcrest South. The nurses not only made it an exciting experience for me, but they also included my boys. The nurses made us feel like we were the only family there. After Ava was born, they couldn't wait to bring our boys in to meet their little sister.

The staff at Hillcrest South was so accommodating, and each went out of their way to make sure I was comfortable, including my postpartum nurse. They make you feel like you're important and they're glad you are there. Your needs and care are the staff's priority.

I couldn't have asked for a better experience.

Thank You Tulsa for a Dream Come True

From the Mayor

By MAYOR G.T. BYNUM
City of Tulsa

I am pleased and honored to serve my fellow Tulsans as the 40th Mayor of the City of Tulsa. Thank you for electing me as your mayor – it is a dream come true. I love this city, and I love having the opportunity to serve as your mayor.

With the kind support of the Greater Tulsa Reporter, you will see my monthly articles here, dedicated to updating you on city-related topics. In the coming weeks our administration will work hard to bring Tulsa together, so that all areas: north, south, east and west – prosper and thrive.

Today is an exciting time to be a Tulsan. We have a spirit of high expectations that can make our city nationally competitive, change our relationship with the county, and change the way we work with the schools and do more to make sure kids in north Tulsa have the same opportunities as kids in the rest of the city.

Our spirit of high expectations will allow us, in the next few years, to open the greatest city park in America, become the home to an Olympic sport, and transform the museum that houses the world's greatest collection of Western art. We will build a lake in the center of the city, creating new recreational opportunities for the entire region. We will no longer lag behind, but will be a leader in the field of public transportation with the installation of bus rapid transit lines. We will also be a national leader in the use of data to deliver tremendous customer service to citizens.

We will work hard to build a great workplace for City employees. We will put an employee feedback process in place to create one of the best corporate cultures in the nation. Our management team, department heads and employees will work toward making us a nationally-leading innovative city.

Together, we can build the kind of city we will all be proud to pass on to the next generation.

I am thankful to be assisted in this work, not just by my City Council colleagues and the hard-working employees at the City of Tulsa but also by a number of new faces in the Mayor's Office:

Michael Junk, Deputy Mayor; Jack Blair, Chief of Staff; Amy Brown, Deputy Chief of Staff; Mayor Kathy Taylor, Chief of Economic Development; James Wagoner, Chief of Performance Strategy and Innovation; Nick Doctor, Chief of Community Development and Policy; Jonathan Townsend, Mayor's Assistant for Community Development and Policy; Christina Starzl Mendoza, Mayor's Assistant for Community Development and Policy; Kimberly Madden, Mayor's Executive Aide; and Brandon Oldham, Mayor's Aide

Get ready for great things, Tulsa – the best is yet to come!

Tulsa to Receive Gem with OKPOP Museum

$25 Million Facility to be Built Across from Cain's Ballroom

Oklahoma Historical Society officials have announced the organization will construct the Oklahoma Museum of Popular Culture (OKPOP) at 422 N. Main St. in Tulsa, across the street from the historic Cain's Ballroom, home of Bob Wills. Tulsan David Sharp and Interak Corporation donated the quarter block of land for the OKPOP site, estimated to be valued at $1 million.

"This is the perfect location for the museum because of the significance of Cain's Ballroom to Oklahoma's popular culture history," OHS Executive Director Dr. Bob Blackburn says.

Additionally, Jeff Moore, OKPOP director, announced the new museum has acquired the personal collection of the late Leon Russell, including his most recent piano. This collection includes more than 2,500 audio masters from Russell's recording career and his work with Shelter Records. Russell and Denny Cordell established Shelter Records in 1969 and soon relocated the company from Los Angeles to Tulsa.

"This collection is of major importance to OKPOP as it keeps this Oklahoman's great work in Tulsa, instead of it being housed in Nashville or on the coasts," Moore says. "The Leon Russell Collection will join other donated collections from Oklahomans, such as Bob Wills, Ernie Fields, Patti Page, Jamie Oldaker, Mary Kay Place, Tom Mix and Mason Williams."

Tulsa-based firm Lilly Architects and Chris Lilly teamed with Overland Partners of San Antonio to lead the architectural design of OKPOP. Lilly has extensive experience working in the Brady Arts District.

"Taylor Hanson approached us with the idea of locating the OKPOP across the street from Cain's. He knew that this location offers the perfect mix of public visibility, proximity to a historic cultural and entertainment district, and the ability to benefit Tulsa through tourism," says Moore.

Site planning and design will commence in 2017, will break ground at the beginning of 2018 and open late in the fourth quarter of 2019. The OKPOP facility will include an underground, 100-space parking garage to support visitors but also surrounding businesses such as Cain's Ballroom.

OKPOP will be a new visitor experience that explores the incredible history and creativity of Oklahoma's contributions to popular culture in the areas of music, movies, television, radio, theater, pop art, literature, comics, humor and Route 66.

Some of the Oklahomans who will be featured at the OKPOP include Will Rogers, Bob Wills, Joan Crawford, Gene Autry, Leon Russell, Reba McEntire, S. E. Hinton, Garth Brooks, Wes Studi, Alfre Woodard, James Marsden, Carrie Underwood and Kristin Chenoweth, among countless others.

"Newcomers are constantly blown away by our historic attractions and film and music scene. Now, OKPOP adds even more appeal to our cool factor," VisitTulsa President Ray Hoyt says. "The estimated breakdown of 100,000 visitors to OKPOP on an annual basis, results in more than $11 million dollars within the Oklahoma economy."

The design and construction of OKPOP is funded by a $25 million bond issue, which the Oklahoma State legislature approved in May 2015.

TAKE ME BACK: Bob Wills and many other famous Oklahoma entertainers will be honored at the OKPOP Museum.

touts the leadership of Dr. Blackburn for making OKPOP a reality.

"Dr. Blackburn relentlessly led the charge and never lost faith in the vision to establish a world-class museum in one of Tulsa's most prominent entertainment hubs. For eight years, he traveled back and forth to Tulsa, visiting with leaders and philanthropists within the business community and educating us on everything from design concepts to proposed legislation," Neal says. "Additionally, the Chamber's regional OneVoice legislative agenda strongly advocated for the project along with many individual supporters."

Music, Theater, Comedy Kick Off 2017 in Greater Tulsa

The holidays are a reflective time when we enact family tradition and assess the year past. The new year dawns, and we are ready to embrace whatever comes next. This year we greet a new president, and wish the best for all Americans and for our global neighbors as well. I hope you can find time to blend your hard work, study, or focused-elsewhere time with engaging entertainment and fun. There is more to do, see and explore in the Tulsa area than ever before.

The entertainment the local casinos have been bringing in has been substantial, and will increase with the opening of the large performance theatre at the River Spirit Event Center. Don Henley's Jan. 19 show at River Spirit is already sold out, but tickets to country music star Alan Jackson's Jan. 20 concert are still available.

This is a good opportunity to talk briefly about buying tickets online. There are numerous ticket resale sites operating that look like a venue's online ticket office but are not. These resale sites jack up ticket prices as much as four to five times the actual ticket price. Whether you are purchasing tickets for an event at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center, the BOK Center, or the Hard Rock, Brady Theatre or elsewhere, be sure you are not purchasing from resellers, also known as "scalpers." Buy from the official venue website. Also, in many instances, when you purchase at the venue itself, you can avoid most convenience fees.

The Joint at the Hard Rock hosts the Gold and Platinum-selling band 38 Special on Jan. 6, followed by Tanya Tucker on Jan. 12. Tucker began her singing career at age 13 with her colossal hit "Delta Dawn." Her lengthy career and life experiences, including liaisons with some of entertainment's biggest names, would make an engaging film.

Speaking of interesting lives, Priscilla Presley has a lot of stories she could tell. It will be 40 years in 2017 since Elvis died at age 42. His ex-wife, mother of his daughter, Lisa Marie, and former mother-in-law to Michael Jackson, visits the Hard Rock for "Elvis and Me, An Open Conversation." Career-wise, she's appeared in numerous movies and as Jenna Wade on "Dallas" from 1983 to 1988. This Jan. 27 event at The Joint includes a time when the audience can ask Ms. Presley candid questions.

I'd never heard of "Noonatics" until I began researching the Herman's Hermits, but they exist and follow the band's star, Peter Noone. Like Tanya Tucker, Noone was a child prodigy. He began acting and singing as a teen. British TV fans know him from "Coronation Street," and Americans may recognize him as the character Paddington from "As the World Turns." Most of us are familiar with the Herman's Hermits' 1960s-era hit songs: "I'm Into Something Good, "Mrs. Brown You Have a Lovely Daughter," and "There's a Kind of Hush." The band earned 14 Gold-selling singles and seven Gold albums. The ever-charismatic Peter Noone and Herman's Hermits perform at The Joint, Jan. 29.

If you feel in need of a few laughs to shake off that holiday stress and election tension, take in comedian

Lisa Lampanelli's show at the Brady, Jan. 13, or get stirred up anew by Bill O'Reilly and Dennis Miller at the BOK Center, also on Jan. 13. Other events coming to the BOK Center this month are Red Hot Chili Peppers, Jan. 14 – "take me to the place I love" – and Cirque Du Soleil's "Ovo," Jan. 25-29. You know what to expect with a Cirque show. It's over-the-top athletic and gorgeous to view. This presentation concerns the ecosystem of insects, so there will be fantasy and fantastic costumes and choreography. The score to the piece was inspired by music from Brazil. "Ovo" means egg in Portuguese.

I've not been retired very long from the Tulsa Performing Arts Center, but I miss being there and working with good people who value the arts. On Jan. 13, Tulsa Town Hall hosts writer Luis Alberto Urrea in Chapman Music Hall. Born in Mexico, Urrea is a multi-award-winning poet, novelist and essayist. The title of his lecture is "From Tijuana to the World." At the PAC on Jan. 14, Tulsa Symphony features Bulgarian-born violinist Rossitza Jekova-Goza in a program that includes the music of Mendelssohn, Ravel and Beethoven's 4th Symphony. Celebrity Attractions brings back the humor-filled "Men Are From Mars; Women Are From Venus," Jan. 20-21.

I'm so much looking forward to the velvety voice of Nathan Gunn, Jan. 22. Choregus Productions hosts this handsome, celebrated baritone and his wife, Julie Gunn, who will accompany him. The concert will be a mix of opera and pop songs. If you don't know Gunn, Google him on YouTube and listen to his voice. Also at the PAC this month is Theatre Tulsa's "Peter and the Starcatcher," a musical, which is a prequel to the Peter Pan story, Jan. 27- Feb. 5.

A show that people have been asking about for months, "Paw Patrol Live! Race to the Rescue," is slated for four performances at the PAC, Jan. 28-29. The Canadian animated TV show about a boy named Ryder and seven dogs who save the day, every day, is a big hit with families.

At the Broken Arrow Performing Arts Center, which has a penchant for hosting diva singers extraordinaire, 4 Girls 4 gives one performance, Jan. 21. Music direction is by well-known talent Billy Stritch. The four singers all have Broadway musical clout. Andrea McArdle, who many will know as the original Broadway Annie, is joined by

Tulsa PAC Continues 40-Year Celebration in January

Special from the PAC

It's a new year, and with it comes the excitement and spectacle of celebrating 40 years of entertainment at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center. Here's what is coming in January:

The new year begins with Tulsa Town Hall speaker Luis Alberto Urrea, a prolific and acclaimed writer who uses his dual-culture life experiences to explore greater themes of love, loss and triumph. A 2005 Pulitzer Prize finalist for nonfiction and a member of the Latino Literature Hall of Fame, Urrea is the best-selling author of 16 books, winning numerous awards for his poetry, fiction and essays. Born in Tijuana to a Mexican father and an American mother, Urrea is most recognized as a border writer, though he says, "I am more interested in bridges not borders." Nearly 100 cities and colleges have chosen his books Into the Beautiful North, The Devil's Highway and The Hummingbird's Daughter for One Book community reading programs.

The lecture will be Jan. 13, 10:30 a.m. in Chapman Music Hall.

Tulsa Symphony Classics continues its winning season with Beethoven's 4th Symphony. Inspiration can come from anything, anywhere, at any time. Mendelssohn, a lover of nature, found inspiration in the natural acoustics of a sea cave in the Inner Hebrides of Scotland for "The Hebrides." The idea for Ravel's "Le tombeau de Couperin" came forth on a battlefield in World War I, and the Hungarian musical style of his "Tzigane" came after hearing a private concert by a talented Hungarian violinist. Catching his breath before returning to the heroic struggles of his Fifth Symphony, Beethoven found inspiration for his illuminating Symphony No. 4 while retiring in the country estate of a devoted admirer. Daniel Hege conducts this concert, which features violinist Rossitza Jekova-Goza. The concert is Jan. 14, 7:30 p.m. in Chapman Music Hall.

Returning to Tulsa is Men Are From Mars; Women Are From Venus-Live!, presented by Celebrity Attractions, Jan. 20-21 in the John H. Williams Theatre. This Off-Broadway comedy hit is a one-man fusion of theatre and stand-up based on The New York Times best-selling book by John Gray. Moving swiftly through a series of vignettes, the show is a light-hearted look at the differences between men and women within relationships. Star of the show is Amadeo Fusca, who currently performs on the Upright Citizens Brigade Maude House Sketch Comedy team Hot Bird. In 2013, he won the legendary Friars Club "So You Think You Can Roast?" competition, beating out 55 comedians. As the winner, Fusca got to help Sarah Silverman, Bob Saget, Amy Schumer and other comedians roast actor Jack Black. Fusca has also appeared in the TV series "Boardwalk Empire," "Marvel's Daredevil" and "As The World Turns." He had a supporting role in the feature film "A New York Heartbeat."

On Jan. 22, Choregus Productions proudly presents Nathan Gunn at 3 p.m. in the John H. Williams Theatre. Gunn has made a reputation as one of the most exciting and in-demand baritones of the day. He has appeared in internationally-renowned opera houses such as the Metropolitan Opera, San Francisco Opera, Lyric Opera of Chicago, Royal Opera House, Paris Opera, Bayerische Staatsoper, Glyndebourne Opera Festival, Theater an der Wien, Teatro Real in Madrid and the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie. His many roles include the title roles in "Billy Budd," "Eugene Onegin," "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" and "Hamlet." Also a distinguished concert performer, Gunn has appeared with the New York Philharmonic, Boston Symphony Orchestra, San Francisco Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, Cleveland Orchestra, Minnesota Orchestra, London Symphony Orchestra, and the Rotterdam Philharmonic Orchestra. Gunn's wife, pianist Julie Gunn, will accompany him in this recital of opera and pop favorites.

Pirates, mermaids and magic all come together for Theatre Tulsa's presentation of Peter and the Starcatcher. This swashbuckling grown-up prequel to "Peter Pan" upends the century-old story of how a miserable orphan comes to be The Boy Who Would Not Grow Up. From marauding pirates and jungle tyrants to unwilling comrades and unlikely heroes, "Peter and the Starcatcher" playfully explores the depths of greed and despair and the bonds of friendship, duty and love. Based on the 2006 novel "Peter and the Starcatchers" by Dave Barry and Ridley Pearson and adapted for the stage by Rick Elice, the play won five Tony Awards in 2012. The play runs Jan. 27-29 and Feb. 2-5 in the Liddy Doenges Theatre.

PAW Patrol Live! Race to the Rescue is sure to delight audiences young and young at heart Jan. 28-29 in Chapman Music Hall. PAW Patrol is on a roll with its first-ever live tour.

It's the day of the Super Adventure Race between Adventure Bay's Mayor Goodway and Foggy Bottom's Mayor Humdinger, but Mayor Goodway is nowhere to be found. PAW Patrol to the rescue! Ryder summons Marshall, Chase, Skye, Rubble, Rocky, Zuma and Everest to help. The pups share many lessons for all ages as they make heroic rescues on their race to the finish line. Creativity, Community Built at Coworking Spaces

"Community" seems to be the new buzzword, carrying with it the idea of creating a sense of belonging and of forming connections. With technology and its uses growing, it's no surprise; humans are, ironically, more connected to one another than ever, regardless of geographical location, and yet more distanced than ever — fueling our innate need and desire to connect with others.

Thinking back to my days as a freelancer and, even still, as a full-time writer at present, my days can often be largely solitary and, therefore, sometimes lonely. As could be said of many jobs, no doubt.

Thus, the desire for a social environment can arise.

While many places may fill this need, with coffee shops and cafés having become common gathering places, other, more purpose-driven models have been springing up around the country largely in the form of coworking spaces, membership-based shared workspaces.

These spots not only provide flexible and communal work areas but also generate conversations and light bulb moments.

Tulsa's coworking spaces include Savage Space, 1213 E. Admiral Blvd., The Bridge, 5272 S. Lewis Ave., and 36 Degrees North, 36 E. Cameron St., which opened in the Brady Arts District in 2016.

When 36 Degrees North first opened, excitement was all around as to the ways it would contribute to the local entrepreneurial community as well as to downtown Tulsa, and while I felt equally enthusiastic, I did not view it as a place that I would frequent but as a place for entrepreneurs and self-employed, business-minded individuals who are looking to collaborate.

However, after a recent visit to 36 Degrees North to attend a free 1 Million Cups presentation, my mind has been happily opened.

The national program 1 Million Cups was created to engage and connect entrepreneurs. Every Wednesday, the group meets at 9 a.m. at 36 Degrees North, where local start-ups present their businesses in an effort to connect with mentors, peers and advisors.

However, being an entrepreneur is not a requirement to attend.

This platform offers an additional opportunity for individuals unrelated to the entrepreneurial community to take and give as much as they please, social opportunities without the requirement of interaction, all the while being inspired and motivated by the sheer number of ideas and talented people all around.

It's these types of give-and-take settings where new ideas are formed and seeds for future projects are planted. Moreover, these kinds of events are excellent resources for staying up to date on things just beginning to sprout in Tulsa.

Various free events at 36 Degrees North are plentiful, including women's coworking days and Cultivate 918 meetings, offering many opportunities to visit the venue and explore, learn, and just breathe in the energy.

And who knows? You may become the one with the next big idea.

Tulsa Community Members Provide Eco Wisdom

This holiday season brings with it the tradition of making New Year's Resolutions. I enjoy the process of looking back to be inspired as I move forward, as well as finding inspiration from those around me. So here is a round-up of eco habits and resolutions from a few people in our community.

Tulsa Mayor, G.T. Bynum: "One of the most sustainable resources we have is our Tulsa City-County Library system! They provide a venue for our community to share not just books, but movies, music, and more. With the Central Library recently reopened I encourage people to check it out and check out a book while they are there."

Leadership Tulsa Executive

Director, Wendy Thomas: "I've decided to make a resolution to purchase no new clothes in 2017. In addition to the fact I have more clothes already than a person really needs, I've become aware of how much cheap clothing gets simply thrown away. There are so many great resale options, and when I'm tired of something I can donate back to a great nonprofit organization like Goodwill."

Community Affairs Director, APSCO Manufacturing and State Director, OK2Grow and Dream It Do It Oklahoma's

Cameron: "I keep a compost at my house."

Global Gardens Educator, Colby Craig: "In our after-school program, sixth graders come in with boxed lunches provided by the school system. We incorporated chats about recycling best practices while they eat, so now the students take responsibility and recycle or compost everything except the plastic wrap around their sandwich. Inspired to do more, they've started working with the school to find an alternative to the wrap. So for me, it's about learning different habits that benefit everyone."

Shikoba Recycling owner and operator Kristen McCormick: "My tip is stop using disposable K-cup pods. They make reusable K-cups and filters that don't fill up the landfills because no matter what the packaging says, they cannot be recycled without an excessive effort. Reusable options are sold at Bed Bath and Beyond, Target, Walmart and several online retailers."

Okie Crowe owner and operator, Kelli Brown: "I focus on shopping local, small businesses. The money I spend locally goes back into the local economy, helps local workers and families, and supports a local business owner's dream. I am biased but tend to think shops like Okie Crowe offer shoppers something unique you cannot find just anywhere. I usual-

GROWING KNOWLEDGE: A Union student works in Global Gardens at Rosa Parks Elementary, making connections between what we eat and how it's made. ly get a more personable experience, and I like putting my dollars into the hands of people who are hustling to make their dreams successful, just like me."

Schnake Turnbo Frank Senior Account Executive, Hannah Jackson: "I don't take home leftover food from a restaurant unless I'm definitely going to eat it — that way I don't waste a to-go container. Alternately, if I have a catered event or over-purchase food for friends at my house, I take the extra food to the Day Center for the Homeless. I've taken everything from donuts to baked beans, whole meals, excess fruit and more. They're always really friendly and grateful, and they can be creative with their food creations!"

Keller Williams Realtor Associate, Steve Trickett: "I'm fighting my packrat nature and getting rid of a lot of old computers and other electronics that don't work, are out of date, or just aren't worth fixing. Seems so strange to shed all these items that once cost many hundreds of dollars and are now worthless. But decluttering feels great. Off to the recyclers! Natural Evolutions got my old DVD rom and Zip drive. The old Macs were taken in by MegaWatts and put on their museum wall. They didn't have any Quicksilver G4s circa year 2000, so they were happy to get them, and I'm happy they'll live on and maybe even be restored."

Thank you to all in our community to strive to "green" our lifestyles. Before you begin making New Year's Resolutions, take a moment to soak in all that you already do well, and appreciate yourself that you have motivation to add new and improved habits into 2017. Send in your New Year's Resolution to bethturner@me.com, and I'll tweet about it @TrashTalkTulsa.

DINING OUT IN GREATER TULSA

Torero Brings Latin Flavors to Downtown Tulsa

Local Dining

By BLAKE AUSTYN
Contributing Writer

Torero Bar and Kitchen, 202 S. Cheyenne Ave., opened in downtown Tulsa near the BOK Center in July, tucked away on the east side of One Place Tower, offering Latin American dishes and an extensive beer, wine and cocktail menu.

While its location may not scream out for attention to patrons milling around, the buzz about town since this restaurant opened has done that and more.

Torero is a venture of Chip Gaberino and Noah Bush, creators of The Saturn Room and Hodge's Bend, and Hodge's Bend executive chef Ian Van Anglen.

While the exterior may not offer much to gaze upon, the interior is a different story and deceptively larger than one might first expect. A long, eye-catching bar draws patrons in immediately, taking up one side of the restaurant. In the other portion of the restaurant is a cozy dining area tucked under a staircase that leads to a small second-level eating area. The dining area faces northeast with floor-to-ceiling windows, offering a pleasant city view and giving the space a more expansive feel.

With construction well underway on Hampton Inn & Suites at One Place directly to the restaurant's south and a Hilton Garden Inn to eventually open to its east, Torero can likely expect not only local and but out-of-patrons in the months ahead.

When my friend and I paid a visit for an early Friday evening dinner, the restaurant was yet to start bustling. "But on event nights at the BOK Center, we are packed," the host told us.

Torero's menu consists of four categories: raw dishes, tapas-style small plates and salads, street food, and larger dishes for those not interested in the tapas-style, sharing concept.

The restaurant also offers happy hour food specials, including $2 baby back ribs and $1 Caribbean wings, Monday-Friday 3-6 p.m. and 9 p.m.-close.

We figured we would sample something off each portion of the menu, starting with Scallop Aguachile. The scallops were bathed in a chilled poblano pepper and green herb broth, with avocado and lime. Raw anything is usually an acquired taste, so the food's texture

ONE PLACE TOWER: Torero Bar and Kitchen, 202 S. Cheyenne Ave., opened in July and is located on the east side of One Place Tower in downtown Tulsa.

EXPANSIVE SPACE: Torero's Latin American menu consists of raw dishes, tapas-style small plates and salads, street food, and larger dishes. could be an issue for some diners, my friend included. The freshness of the ingredients lived the dish.

We also opted for the Charqui Wings and the Costillas as it was still within the Happy Hour timeframe.

The wings have a Caribbean spice, with a nice bit of heat, but my favorite dish of the entire night was the Costillas, chili-rubbed baby back ribs, so tender that they could put some barbecue joints to shame.

The Cuban Beef Picadillo is a Small Plate of fried plantains, the saltiness of which paired nicely with the beef.

The menu's Street Food category provides nice options for diners not looking to be too adventurous. We sprung for the Mahi Mahi Tacos, filled with Mahi Mahi, cabbage and pickled jalapeño.

For our Large Plate, we tried the vegetarian dish: Porotos Granados, a Chilean bean and pumpkin stew, with potatoes and corn — a great dish for a cold night.

Torero opens seven days a week at 11 a.m., with brunch available Saturday-Sunday until 3 p.m.

OSU-Tulsa to Hold Non-Credit Beer, Wine Education Courses

For those looking to increase their knowledge of beer and wine, Oklahoma State University's Hotel and Restaurant Administration and the Wayne Hirst Center for Beverage Education will offer two non-credit courses to the public, starting in January at the OSU-Tulsa campus.

On Jan. 21 and 28, OSU-Tulsa will hold Intro to Malted Beverages (HRAD 4850), 8:30 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Proof of age will be required.

The course will provide an overview of the history of beer, brewing process, styles, beer and food pairings, and the industry behind the beer business.

The knowledge gained in the class is intended to offer students a baseline understanding of malted beverages from an inside perspective. The course instructor is a seven-year veteran within the craft beer industry.

By the end of the course, students should be knowledgeable in the basic history of beer and craft brewing, be able to explain the general brewing process, including the four basic ingredients, identify various beer styles and classifications, and demonstrate how to properly serve beer.

On March 25 and April 1, the non-credit class Beverages in the Hospitality Industry (HRAD 3721) will be held, 8:30 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Proof of age will be required.

This course offers an introduction to the world of wine with an overview of production and farming techniques, major red and white grape varietals and the wine growing regions that produce them, and instruction on how to evaluate, taste and pair wine with food.

Bishop Kelley Academic Bowl Team Places First Nationally

Bishop Kelley High School Academic Bowl team placed first among 155 high school teams across the country in a December online academic quiz competition.

Bishop Kelley's team had one of the fastest completion times in the contest and was the only team to answer more than 75 percent of questions correctly, according to Academic Bowl Coach Medea Bendel.

Questions Unlimited, qunlimited.com, held its first national online tournament in December, and Bishop Kelley has participated twice in this tournament and plans to compete again in April, Bendel says.

The team finished first among 155 teams from across the nation; crosstown rival Booker T. Washington High School finished seventh. Teams that registered could go online to take the test during a week-long window, and scores were based on an honors system, says Bendel. Coaches monitored students to ensure they

Tulsair Beechcraft Donates Aircraft to Tulsa Tech

1968 Learjet 25 Provides Unique Opportunity for Aviation Students

Aviation students at Tulsa Tech have the opportunity to work on a wide variety of aircraft in an FAA-approved aviation environment as they study ground operations, the use of aircraft composite materials, and the maintenance of both reciprocating and turbine engines.

Thanks to a very generous donation from Tulsair Beechcraft, the Tulsa Tech Riverside Campus hangar is now home to a 1968 Learjet 25. This remarkable aircraft was delivered on Dec. 9 after departing Tulsa International Airport, completing a final salute pass over the Jones-Riverside airport, then landing at the facility and taxiing to the Tulsa Tech hangar.

According to Tom Clark, chairman of Tulsair Beechcraft, the donation was an opportunity to keep the aircraft in America and support local Tulsa aviation education.

"The airplane had reached the end of its useful life in the United States from an operational standpoint," Clark says. "Rather than sell it into another country, we chose to donate it to support local aviation technician education programs, and Tulsa Tech was a great fit."

Located at Tulsa International

Airport and Millington Municipal Airport in Tennessee, Tulsair Beechcraft offers a complete line of aircraft support services including fuel and line service, heavy airframe and engine maintenance, advanced avionics installation and repair, aircraft sales and leasing, and worldwide Beechcraft parts sales.

The donated Learjet 25 is an American 10-seat, twin-engine, high-speed business jet aircraft introduced by Learjet in late 1967. The small business jet offered an ideal high speed platform for six-to-eight passengers, with a high rate of climb, enabling it to pass congested flight levels quickly. With typical cruising altitudes between 39,000 and 43,000 feet, the aircraft is able to fly over most weather systems and congested airspace. The Lear-25, provided by Tulsair, tail number N473TC, is in excellent condition and makes it difficult to believe this pristine business jet was manufactured nearly 50 years ago.

Sheryl Oxley, Tulsa Tech's Aviation Program coordinator, says that despite the age of the aircraft, all of the flight systems are up to date and still relevant to aviation education curriculum.

"This is an impeccable example of a Lear 25," says Oxley, "which will allow students to experience both the interior and the exterior of this aircraft, identical to what they will find in the industry. Many of these fine planes are still out there flying, and this particular aircraft has been maintained at a very high level. We are very grateful and extremely fortunate to receive this donation from Tulsair."

J.J. Lester, president of Tulsair Beechcraft, says the high-performance business jet has been based in the Tulsa area for the past 30 years.

"We originally purchased the aircraft in the 1980s for one of our customers," Lester says. "Since then, we have either owned or operated the plane and performed all of the maintenance and avionics work on the plane."

With this substantial donation, Tulsair Beechcraft has demonstrated not only their commitment to local aviation education but also their commitment to the community of Tulsa.

"Tulsair is heavily invested in the aircraft maintenance and avionics fields," says Lester. "It is important to encourage and train our young people for the career path opportunities available in aviation. It's good for our business to have a larger, more qualified labor pool, and more importantly, it's good for Tulsa."

If you're currently looking for exciting classes for high school and adult students, quality business and industry training, or are climbing toward a new career, Tulsa Tech invites you to visit today. For more information, please call 918-828-5200 or visit us online at tulsatech.edu.

NSU Program Receives Award

Northeastern State University's Continuing Education Department was recently recognized for its Crime Scene Investigator Certificate program, the program being named Best Non-credit Program in Crime Scene Investigation during the 78th annual Association for Continuing Higher Education (ACHE) conference, held in October in New Orleans.

The CSI certificate was developed in partnership with the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation and was designed for current law enforcement officers who would like to further develop their understanding, skills and expertise as it relates to crime scene investigations.

The program is instructed by crime scene agents from the OSBI and the Broken Arrow Police Department, with a combination of online and face-to-face learning.

B.A.-BASED OFFERING: Individuals from Northeastern State University Broken Arrow's Continuing Education Department accept an award for the university's Crime Scene Investigator Certificate program.

B.A. Teachers of the Year

Prior to fall break, each of the district's 27 schools announced their 2016-17 Site Teacher of the Year.

The Teacher of the Year process continues as site representatives compete for the District Teacher of the Year. Each Site Teacher of the Year will submit a portfolio to the Teacher of the Year Professional Development Committee, a group composed of teachers, administrators and previous Teachers of the Year. This year's district winner will be announced at the annual Star Awards Gala taking place this spring. From there, this educator represents Broken Arrow Public Schools in the State Teacher of the Year competition next summer.

"As a committee, we meet to thoroughly evaluate each portfolio, conduct interviews and select the best candidate for District Teacher of the Year," said Jennifer Peterson, director of elementary instruction. "Although the process is quite rigorous, it allows us to not only honor outstanding educators in our district but also helps all of our educators strive to be the best they can be for the benefit of our students."

City Endeavors to Keep Pace with Growth of entertainment attractions would be of interest to them?"

Another of Spurgeon's priorities has been improving government transparency. In addition to launching an annual financial report and online video recaps of city council meetings, the city is planning to add more content online and to its government access channel to further inform residents on city news.

Coming most likely in late 2017, will be residential curbside recycling, a program that the city desperately needs in order to keep pace with other cities and to improve its sustainability, Spurgeon said.

Also coming in 2017 will be a General Obligation Bond Package vote for utility infrastructure projects.

New School Leadership

Spurgeon also took a moment to acknowledge and welcome Dr. Janet Dunlop in her new role as Broken Arrow Public Schools Interim Superintendent. She will take over Jan. 3 in replacement of Dr. Jarod Mendenhall.

Since 2010, Dunlop served as associate superintendent of instructional services at BAPS under Mendenhall. In 2016, she was named deputy superintendent of assessment and accountability at the Oklahoma State Department of Education and left BAPS in November.

In a press conference held Dec. 13, Dunlop spoke about her plans moving into this new role with the school district.

"We plan to have continuity going forward: our mantra and vision is still the same," she said.

Dunlop said that she will continue the district on its current trajectory, that includes continuing forward with the High School Planning Committee as well as the district's literacy, special education and graduation initiatives.

"I plan to be very, very visible," she said. "How can I be accessible unless I'm in the schools, talking to teachers, parents? That's how you get a true picture of what's happening in the schools."

BROKEN ARROW SPORTS

B.A. Tigers Off to Good Roundball Start

By MIKE MOGUIN
Sports Writer

Broken Arrow's boys are off to a hot start on the hardwood.

The Tigers were 5-2 and ranked No. 10 in Class 6A as of Dec. 16.

The early-season success is carrying over from the end of last season, when Broken Arrow endured a struggling 9-17 finish yet got most of its wins near the end.

"That is definitely the case," says Beau Wallace, who is now in his fourth year as the Tigers' coach. "And I don't think last year's team was as bad as our record was. There were a lot of games that were lost by seven points or less. This team has figured out how to get over the hump."

Wallace also points out that his players are closer than they were a year ago.

Broken Arrow entered the Christmas break coming off a loss to a higher-ranked Union (No. 3) squad. But B.A.'s last win before the long period off was a 55-54 squeaker on the road against Sand Springs. A game-winning basket by Braden Boyer with 38 seconds left was what lifted the Tigers to victory against the Sandites.

The Tigers led 16-13 after one period and had a 28-27 halftime advantage. Sand Springs took the lead in the second half and was up 43-41 when the third session closed.

"I think this team is really resilient," Wallace says. "I tell them this all the time. I really like this team and there is something about them that they never really feel out of the game. Even when we got down six or seven points at different times in the game, especially, late in the fourth quarter (against Sand Springs), I never really saw that they didn't think they could win the game. As a coaching staff, we never thought that as well."

The forces within the Tigers are in their starting-five, which consist of Boyer (6-7, junior, forward), Caleb Huffman (6-4, junior, guard), who led the team in scoring against Sand Springs with 29 points, Tony Hall (6-5, senior, guard), Major Smith (6-0, junior, guard) and Taylor Gonzales (6-1, senior, guard).

Huffman is often the offensive scoring leader for Broken Arrow. He is well-known in basketball circles. He's been offered by three Division-I schools already and is likely to receive more through the progression of his prep career.

"If he's in attack-mode, we're really good," Wallace says. "Last year, he had games where he was in attack mode and he had games where he wasn't. One of the things we wanted to focus on over the summer was with him staying aggressive all the time. He is so skilled and fast and can do a lot of different things. But the one thing he has gotten better at besides being aggressive offensively is becoming a better rebounder."

Wallace says he has been challenging Huffman to average 10 rebounds per game.

"He is that good of an athlete that he can do that. I've also told him that if he can rebound the ball and he can get out in transition, we are really good," Wallace says.

It is paying off.

Boyer, Wallace says, has made improvement.

2016-2017 BROKEN ARROW TIGERS

Courtesy Broken Arrow Athletic Department

"I've seen him grow up and a light switch has come on and turn the corner offensively and defensively." "He is rebounding the ball with a vengeance, which is really good for us. He brings a lot of energy and he's a high IQ guy. It's always nice to have guys that understand basketball and can think the game as well as play it."

"(Tony Hall) is a two-year starter who is a strong kid. He is such a vocal leader for us," Wallace adds.

Defense is where Smith is relied upon.

"He is a kid that just works hard," Wallace says. "He is a really good leader. He's not one of those kids that's going to get you 15 or 20 every night, but he is going to guard the best (opposing) point guard. He's going to talk, and he's going to get us into the flow."

Gonzales is known for bringing a lot of energy.

"He does some things for us that need to get done," Wallace says. Key players from the bench include Camryn Dennis (6-4, junior, guard), Julius Hughes (6-1, senior, guard), Damian Everette (6-0, junior, guard) and Cale Emsinger (6-1, senior, guard).

GREAT GOLF TOWN: Broken Arrow is home to some of the finest golf courses anywhere. Among the courses are the city-owned Battle Creek, Forest Ridge, Indian Springs, Cedar Ridge, and the Golf Club of Oklahoma. Many golfers are looking forward to warm weather to hit the links.

Victory Christian Reaches State Football Finals

By MIKE MOGUIN
Sports Writer

Victory Christian may have not won the state championship, but making it was a big plus for a program that was expected to be in a rebuilding year since it lost excellent players Keats Calhoon and Jon-Michael Terry to graduation. Instead, the Conquerors went to the state title game for the first time in 12 years.

"It's special at any class at any school when you get to the championship game," says Victory coach Ron Smith, who completed his second year at the post. "These kids, when we started the year, we really believed that if things went our way, we could win a state championship."

Victory (13-2) lost 56-33 to Oklahoma City Millwood on Dec. 9 in Stillwater. But at one point, in the third quarter, the Conquerors had a 27-26 lead over the long-time perennial powerhouse Falcons.

Millwood (15-0) exploded from there with a 30-point run that carried over into the fourth quarter.

After yielding three TDs to the Falcons, Victory was in position to trim the deficit to 11 points with a goal-to-go situation with around nine minutes left in the game. It scored, but the TD was nullified by a penalty. On the next play, Millwood intercepted a pass and took it 97 yards for a TD.

Instead of reducing the deficit, Victory was down 50-27.

"Basically, the game is over at that point, we're not going to overcome a three-touchdown deficit to Millwood. That's just part of the game, and they got after us pretty good after that," Smith says.

"I was really proud of our kids," Smith says. "We certainly didn't give up. We felt like we had a good game plan, and we knew we had to play a perfect game to win."

The Conquerors, who were ranked seventh, flourished in their passing attack. They did score the first touchdown and led 7-0 after the first quarter and led 13-12 in the second.

R.J. Wakley threw for four TDs and 360 yards on 31-of-51 attempts and rushed for another score.

Caleb Calhoon was the leading receiver with 11 catches for 153 yards with two TDs.

Tyler Hicks, a running back, also factored in as a receiver, finishing with 10 receptions for 119 yards and two TDs.

Working against Victory were eight turnovers - six on interceptions, and only 50 yards rushing.

Wakley, Calhoon and Hicks were key skill position players through most of the season. All three return next year as seniors. And that's not all.

"Our kids believed they (would make the state final) and got in the game, and fell a little short," Smith says. "But the good news is, we got a whole bunch of guys coming back. We feel very good about our future here at Victory Christian."

The Conquerors' toughest wins in 2016 came in a 14-10 victory over Holland Hall in Week 10 and a 27-21 win against longtime perennial 2A power Davis in the quarterfinals of the playoffs.

The performance of the defense was instrumental in those games.

"We get a lot of accolades for our offensive output this year," Smith says. "But if the truth be known, our defense had a better year than our offense."

"On the way to the state finals, we beat the Davis Wolves, who many considered the best team in the state," Smith says.

Two goal-line stands against the Wolves inside the 5-yard line made a huge difference for Victory.

"That's a rare feat because the Davis Wolves had not been stopped inside the 5-yard line all year, until they played us," Smith says. "So I was very happy with the way we played defense."

Wakley, Calhoon and Hicks were also significant on the defense. But two other players who also made an impact will not return because they graduate next spring. They are nose guard Jonah Morrow and middle linebacker Brandon Billups, the latter who was a transfer from Union. They were key players in the win against the Wolves, as well as through the season.

Morrow had 119 tackles through the year. "It is a tremendous feat when a down lineman tallies 119 tackles in a season," Smith says. "That is even unusual at the D-I or the NFL level."

Billups had to sit out the first four games of the season due to a broken arm. But he managed to rack up tackles through the rest of the year. "He was the state's leading tackler with 181 in just the 10 games that he played," Smith says.

VICTORY CHRISTIAN QUARTERBACK R.J. WAKLEY

TPS to Hold Hall of Fame Ceremony Jan. 19

Twelve individuals with wide-ranging talents and a common cultural bond will be inducted into the Tulsa Public Schools Hall of Fame on Jan. 19.

In announcing the fifth class of honorees, TPS Director of Athletics Gil Cloud said that the Hall of Fame ceremony and dinner will be held at the Marriott Southern Hills. Individual plaques will be presented to the honorees. Identical plaques will be installed in the permanent home of the Hall of Fame within the TPS Department of Athletics in the Charles Mason Education Service Center, 3027 S. New Haven Ave.

Over the last nine months, a selection committee has weighed the accomplishments of scores of athletes and coaches who made their marks within the Tulsa Public Schools system and beyond.

All nine TPS high schools are represented among the 12 new members of the Hall of Fame. The 2017 class will lift the total membership of the Hall of Fame, begun in 2013, to 62.

Reservations for tables or individual seating should be made through Lisa Norman in the TPS Athletics Department, at 918-746-6453. Individual tickets are $100 and tables are $1,000.

The following profiles are listed in alphabetical order. The photos shown were ones available.

Cathey Durbin Barkley

Thomas Edison

A trailblazer, she was making a big splash in the sports pages while still working toward her graduation in 1975. In the days before females in Tulsa Public Schools were permitted to compete in interscholastic athletics, Cathey Durbin earned a spot on Edison's boys diving team. As a junior in 1974, she became the first female to qualify for the state diving championships on the coed level. As a senior, she again reached the state championship after losing only once (to a male) during the regular season. She qualified for three straight AAU national diving championships before accepting a scholarship to the University of Illinois. She later coached in the Tulsa area. Displaying her athletic skills, she quarterbacked the Tulsa entry in the National Women's Football League in 1977.

Daniel Ford

East Central

Before graduating in 1984, having attended Tulsa Public Schools for 12 years, he lettered in baseball, basketball and football. Earning All-State honors as a quarterback, he accepted a scholarship to play football at the University of Minnesota. Transferring to Arizona State University (1985-88), he was a member of teams that made three straight bowl appearances, winning the Rose and Freedom bowls. He was selected MVP of the 1987 Freedom Bowl, passing for 272 yards and a touchdown in a 33-28 victory over Air Force. He joined the Tulsa Police Department in 1991, serving with distinction until his retirement in 2015, when he joined the City of Tulsa as a project manager. He also found time to coach quarterbacks and coordinate offenses at three Tulsa-area high schools, including his alma mater.

parts of six decades. A native of Wakita, Oklahoma, he was a three-year football letterman at Oklahoma State University. His first coaching job (football, track) with TPS was at Thomas Edison in 1959. He later coached football at Nathan Hale, Memorial and East Central. While Principal at Hale and Booker T. Washington, he coached elementary and middle-school teams. In 1973, he led the development and implementation of a voluntary desegregation program at Washington. Later, he served four years (1987-91) as Executive Director of the Oklahoma Secondary School Activities Association. He returned to TPS as Deputy Superintendent (2008-10). He is a member of the Booker T. Washington Hall of Fame and earned two Tulsa Tribune football Coach of the Year awards at Hale.

Nathan (Nate) Harris

Booker T. Washington

An All-State basketball player in the Class of 1965, he went on to become one of the most acclaimed coaches in Oklahoma history. He played on Oral Roberts University's first basketball team in 1965-66 before launching a Tulsa Public Schools coaching career that spanned 34 years. After leading programs at Thomas Edison and Charles Mason high schools, he returned to his alma mater in 1982. Under his direction, Washington won 10 state championships and finished runner-up twice before his retirement in 2007. His career record stands at 632-239 and he coached in the 1996 McDonald's All-American game. He is a member of the halls of fame of the Oklahoma Coaches Association, Oklahoma Basketball Coaches Association, and Tournament of Champions. The gymnasium at Washington is Nathan E. Harris Field House.

LaNita Luckey

Central

She used her Central experience as a springboard to basketball fame at Baylor University. During her senior year at Central, 1987-88, she was selected Homecoming queen and was a member of the state's Super Five girls basketball All-State team. Ultimately, she was singled out as Oklahoma's Gatorade basketball Player of the Year. Accepting a scholarship to Baylor, she played four years (1988-92) and averaged 16.4 points and 8.3 rebounds. In 2010, she was inducted into the Baylor Athletic Hall of Fame. She was cited for her overall accomplishments and record-setting play, including a perfect 12-for-12 field-goal shooting performance for a game. Later, as the first in her family to graduate from college, she launched a business career that led her to the executive director's position of the Waco, Texas, YMCA.

Wallace (Wally) Maurer

Memorial

His name is synonymous with running, and coaching, throughout the state of Oklahoma. A native of Lima, Ohio, he received a track and cross country scholarship to Miami (Ohio) University and began coaching in 1962. Working in the pipeline field, he moved to Tulsa in 1971 and immediately set a course for excellence in competitive running. He coached and directed AAU teams and programs, and served as meet official and starter for hundreds of local, state and national road races, in addition to the Oklahoma high school championships. From 1998 until 2015, he coached boys and girls track and cross country teams at Memorial. In 1996, he received the Governor's Award as an outstanding "Contributor to Youth Activities." He served as president of the Oklahoma chapter of The Athletics Congress (1984-88).

Carl Morton

Daniel Webster

He had attained "legend" status at Daniel Webster by the time he graduated in 1962. He played a starring role on the Tulsa team that won the 1959 national Babe Ruth League championship. He shared Oklahoma baseball Player of the Year honors with teammate and TPS Hall of Famer Richard Calmus in 1962 after helping Webster win back-to-back state championships. He was a stand-out in basketball and football and attended the University of Oklahoma on a baseball scholarship. He was drafted by the Montreal Expos in 1968 as an outfielder before converting to a pitcher. He was the National League 1970 Rookie of the Year, posting an 18-11 record with four shutouts, 10 complete games. He pitched for Atlanta (1973-76) and had three straight 15-plus win seasons. He died in 1983.

Julius Pegues

Booker T. Washington

In the days before integration, he helped guide Booker T. Washington to three straight Oklahoma high-school basketball state championships. He also played football for three years and was valedictorian of the Class of 1953. Although he did not receive an athletic scholarship to attend the University of Pittsburgh, he did earn the full grant just three games into his freshman year. He went on to become a three-year varsity starter and Pitt's first African-American basketball player. He played in two NCAA basketball tournaments, was selected by the St. Louis Hawks in the NBA draft, and upon graduation in 1958, with a degree in aeronautical engineering, was Pitt's fourth highest career scorer. He retired from McDonnell Douglas as principal engineer/scientist and is a member of the Tulsa Historical Society Hall of Fame.

Shea Seals

McLain

He was the hometown product who made it big. As a high-school senior, he was the 1993 Oklahoma basketball Player of the Year following a season in which he averaged 24.4 points. Accepting a scholarship to the University of Tulsa, his impact was immediate. In his first collegiate game, he scored 33 points. He went on to earn Freshman All-American honors, averaging 16.8 points. Before he graduated in 1997, he had become the school's all-time scoring leader and his jersey number, 21, has been retired. He played seven years of professional basketball. He returned to coach at McLain and at Booker T. Washington, where he won two state championships (2010, 2011). He joined TU's basketball staff as an assistant in 2012. He is a member of the Tournament of Champions Hall of Fame.

Jackson Todd

Will Rogers

A high-school star, a collegiate All-American, a major-league baseball pitcher. At 6-foot-2, the right-hander posted an 11-2 record as a Will Rogers senior in 1970. Over his final two seasons, his earned-run average was 1.01, en route to All-State recognition. Despite being drafted by the Chicago Cubs, he accepted a scholarship to the University of Oklahoma. While at OU, he pitched in the 1971 Pan American Games, in the 1972 College World Series and twice was named All-American. He established an OU record in 1973 with 13 complete games. After being selected in the second round (38th pick) of the 1973 major-league draft by the New York Mets, he pitched in four seasons (with Mets and Toronto) before retiring in 1985. He served as assistant coach at OU for three seasons.

Billy Tubbs Central

From a three-year start as a player at Central, graduating in 1953, he followed up with a 42-year run as a basketball coach. Although he was head coach for 31 seasons at the NCAA level, he is best remembered for the 14 years he was at the University of Oklahoma. From 1980 through 1994, his teams won four Big Eight Conference championships and finished national runner-up in 1988. Twice he was selected National Coach of the Year and his OU record was 333-132, including three seasons with 30-plus wins. He served two stints as head coach at his alma mater, Lamar University (1976-80, 2003-06), and coached at TCU (1994-2002). He won more than 100 games at each school, the ninth coach in NCAA history to do so. His collegiate coaching record is 641-340.

David Vickers Nathan Hale

He was a high-school football blue-chipper, Oklahoma Player of the Year, and that served as a prelude to a decorated college career. Graduating in 1983 as a three-year football and track letterman, he received a scholarship to the University of Oklahoma. He swapped his high-school quarterback role for a key spot in the OU defensive backfield and became a four-year letterman. Chief among his accomplishments: Three-time All-Big Eight Conference, two-time Academic All-Big Eight, two-time second-team All-American, recipient of OU's Sooner Schooner Award for academic achievement. He was a 6-foot-4, 198-pound starter on OU's 1985 national championship team that defeated Penn State University and a captain on the 1987 team. In his four seasons at OU, his teams compiled a record of 42-5-1, never finishing below No. 6 in the final rankings.

CELEBRATION: TU players, coaches and administrators celebrate their 55-10 victory over Central Michigan in the 2016 Miami Beach Bowl Dec. 19 at Marlins Park. Tulsa finished the season with a 10-3 record, the 10th 10-win season in school history, while also capturing the school's 10th bowl game victory.

Flying Tee Hosts Miss United States

Event Benefits No Kid Hungry

FlyingTee, Tulsa's premier golf entertainment venue, teamed up with Miss United States, Alayah Benavidez, to benefit the No Kid Hungry initiative on Dec. 7.

"We are thrilled to have Miss United States in Tulsa for a great opportunity to help make an impact for No Kid Hungry," James Vollbrecht, FlyingTee co-founder and chief technology officer, said. "During the holiday season, many people and businesses, including our facility, are looking for ways to give back. This event gives the community a way to support a great cause."

On Dec. 7, FlyingTee hosted a Long Drive Tournament and donated 50 percent of its golf bay rental proceeds to the No Kid Hungry initiative with the help of Miss United States.

"I'm honored to take part in this event at FlyingTee in support of No Kid Hungry," said Benavidez. "This campaign is near and dear to my heart, so to be able to share it with others and encourage them to donate is a wonderful opportunity for me. I am looking forward to meeting the locals that make up the heartland of America!"

THE ECONOMY

Adrienne Kallweit Talks Entrepreneurialism, Gig Bigwig

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

Some individuals are born with an entrepreneurship gene, it seems, the desire accompanied with the ability to brainstorm and develop new ideas.

"As a serial entrepreneur, you're always creating, always inventing," says Adrienne Kallweit, co-owner and co-founder of SeekingSitters and Gig Bigwig.

Adrienne Kallweit, who earned a bachelor's degree in construction management from the University of Oklahoma, spent years in the construction industry with her husband, David, before they took their first steps in launching SeekingSitters, which provides on-demand background-screened professional babysitters. "The Uber of babysitting, long before Uber," says Adrienne.

The idea for SeekingSitters came about in 2004 after Adrienne performed a background screening on a woman whom she and David planned to employ as a babysitter, only to find that the woman had a criminal history.

Adrienne's extensive knowledge of background investigation comes from her parents, who founded an investigative service company in 1978, Hide and Seek, which Adrienne and David purchased in 1999.

"From the beginning, our plan in creating SeekingSitters was to take it nationwide so that parents everywhere could feel safe," says Adrienne. "We started with Tulsa and began franchising in 2006."

Utilizing the stringent screening practices founded in her investigative practice, to date, SeekingSitters has had zero reported safety incidents and operates in 27 states with more than 100 locations.

At the end of 2015, Adrienne and David evaluated the need to support the verification of "gig workers," a growing industry of temporary workers or independent contractors who contract through various on-demand services.

With a 2017 launch, Gig Bigwig, gigbigwig.com, will provide verification services for gig workers. "It serves somewhat like their online driver's license, giving peace of mind to the consumer," says Adrienne.

EMILY RAMSEY for GTR Newspapers
BUSINESS CREATOR: Adrienne Kallweit and her husband, David, are in the process of launching their second business, Gig Bigwig. In 2004, they founded SeekingSitters, which currently operates in 27 states with more than 100 locations.

NEW COMPANY: Adrienne Kallweit, left, co-founder of SeekingSitters and Gig Bigwig, speaks during a recent 1 Million Cups presentation of Gig Bigwig, held at 36 Degrees North, 36 E. Cameron St. Gig Bigwig provides verification of gig workers by licensed private investigators. Presenting with Kallweit is Gig Bigwig's Jennifer Caudle.

Gig Bigwig's hands-on verification of the gig worker provides a certification that the gig worker's background and work history have been analyzed and cleared by a licensed private investigator. Gig Bigwig also provides a virtual location for gig workers to keep their jobs and payments organized and additional offerings such as tax and credit services.

Regarding Gig Bigwig's verification process, some might wonder what sets them apart from other private investigation or background check companies. Adrienne says, "It is so important how you gather the information and that you analyze the data by an actual person."

With the rise of many gig-based companies, such as Airbnb and Uber, and the growth of the gig industry, the need for a systematic screening process is growing.

It is estimated that there are 40 million gig workers nationally, with 60 million expected by 2020.

"These companies that are providing on-demand services are not utilizing any type of uniform screening process," says Adrienne. "One service said that their advertised 'background check screening' meant that the company called to make sure the worker answered their phone."

Safety, the common thread in Adrienne's business ventures, is something that she feels strongly about and recognizes the national need for improvement.

"When you see the assaults, the deaths happening with some of these sharing services, they don't need to be happening," she says. "We want to help the gig industry grow and help everyone to be safe."

Besides safety, the other underlying theme that, perhaps, runs a bit deeper for Adrienne is her passion to create, which is clearly serving her well.

"Being an entrepreneur has been a gift. And I feel we have an obligation to be passionate about our gifts."

Wabi Cycles Relocates to Tulsa from Los Angeles

Innovative Company Has National Market

By KIRBY DAVIS
Contributing Writer

Bicycle manufacturer Wabi Cycles will complete its downtown Tulsa debut early this year with the rollout of a new racing model.

This will bring its lineup of customizable leisure and town bikes to five.

"We're seeing strong interest in our bikes," says Curtis Kline, who, with co-owner Matt Gragg, bought this seven-year-old firm in May. "We think the product has potential across a much broader demographic. We are using digital marketing to attract those other demographics."

Since its June relocation from Los Angeles to Tulsa's Brady Arts District, Wabi has produced three single-speed models with steel frames for direct sale to internet consumers. Each offers a wide variety of custom options. A fourth model features a 10-speed gearbox. Base prices range from $750 to $1,950 through wabicycles.com, with free shipping within the 48 contiguous U.S. states.

These models appeal to the growing leisure market, says Kline, who handles Wabi's marketing and sales chores. Shipments in the customizable commuter/town bike segment, which also includes electric bicycles, jumped 63 percent in the first nine months of 2016, countering an eight-percent drop in overall U.S. bicycle manufacturer shipments over that same period, according to an October report by Bicycle Retailer magazine.

Wabi's fifth model, expected to begin sales in early 2017, will give the company a cyclocross racing entry. A position in that segment, which also showed growth this year, could provide the young company a nice marketing and sales advantage.

"People that race may have more than one bike," says University of Oklahoma retail economist James Kenderdine. "And they (racing models) can appeal to bicycle magazines and enthusiast groups."

The new Tulsa company targeted its initial e-sales towards women cyclists, a customer base originally overlooked by Wabi founder Richard Snook. Kline said Snook had primarily focused on friends and racing enthusiasts.

"We've actually sold a lot of bikes to women since we've taken over," Kline says. "We think there's a good, solid market there."

Wabi also sees growth potential among college students.

"Right now we're running digital ads to Stanford, UC (University of California) Santa Barbara, and UT (University of Texas) Austin, because those are campuses that are at the top of the list of bike-friendly campuses," Kline says.

"The niche is high-quality, single-speed bikes," he explains. "What you find out there on the market is that single-speed bikes are very popular because they're simple and not really expensive, and in a lot of cases, through their simplicity, are very beautiful bikes. But what aren't in that space are high-quality bikes. There are mass-produced bikes in a lower price range. Our bikes are like those single-speed, steel-framed bikes but they're also high quality."

Wabi imports its frames from Taiwan suppliers, then finishes assembly at its 3,800-square-foot 107 N. Boulder Ave. shop. The company keeps more than 200 frames in stock in order to quickly complete customer orders.

"It's working out well," says Gragg, who oversees Wabi's manufacturing and supplier relations. "In terms of turnaround time, our standard bike takes two or three business days to build."

From its June production start, Kline says Wabi has averaged $30,000 monthly sales in the third quarter. These direct-to-customer transactions originated from about 15 different states, as well as seven other countries.

EMILY RAMSEY for GTR Newspapers

"Our biggest markets are New York City and Los Angeles," Kline says.

Kline and Gragg added a retail outlet at its Tulsa shop on Oct. 7, selling not just Wabi models but two Huntington Beach chopper-styled bicycles. While their focus remains on e-sales outside Tulsa, the duo expects that storefront to help Wabi reach their first-year sales target of $500,000.

"What they've got to do is reach people who cycle a lot, people who understand cycling," says

Kenderdine, professor emeritus of marketing and supply chain management with OU's Price College of Business. "I think there's a market. I probably would have been willing to spend for a good, customized bike."

Lee's Bicycles Closes After 103 Years

By ADAM VANDERBURG
Owner, Lee's Bicycles

What a journey this has been growing up in this business for the last 44 years. My father bought Lee's when it was at 51st Street and Quaker Avenue. At that time, Lee's was selling new and used Euro bikes but mostly servicing Yahoo lawnmowers and old bicycle clunkers!

Growing up in the early 1970s, I was converting old Stingrays into BMX bikes and taking old cruisers and converting them to mountain bikes by late 1970s. That was an epic time as our industry grew and changed quickly and it hasn't stopped since. My first journey at 15 years old was cycling 1,000 miles through western Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Colorado with my best friend. My first road bike race was the Joe Martin Stage Race in Fayetteville, Arkansas in 1981. Bicycling is in my blood. It's now part of our culture and the fabric of the United States.

For 103 years Lee's Bicycles has sold and serviced bicycles in Tulsa. But times change and I've made some significant changes too. I decided to transition the spirit of Lee's and pass this to our new owners - Phat Tire Bike Shop. Phat Tire has the energy and passion to take us into a new century. I met our new owners last year and was impressed with their operation and knowledge of cycling. I felt these guys had the vision and would be perfect owners for Lee's in Tulsa. They are based in Bentonville and have four other locations in Arkansas. If you get the chance, I recommend visiting Northwest Arkansas and checking out some of the great paved trails for road bike riding and soft trails for mountain bike riding.

The beautiful thing about Phat Tire Bike Shop taking over is that I get to continue working at the bike shop. I will be helping them with advocacy, community relations, and events. I can't thank you enough for the decades of support. I am excited to be able to continue living the dream and working with many new members at Phat Tire Bike Shop!

I'll be seeing you...Where the trail meets the road!

Energy Education is Critical for Economic Growth

Future generations are depending on us to keep the American dream alive. For too long we in America have been wasting time blaming the energy industry or the government for failure to adopt a national energy strategy when we each should be responsible for creating the plan.

In order to create a plan, energy education should be at the forefront.

Since I entered the energy business in 1977, going on forty years, the industry has continually been forced to defend itself. For example, in 1985, I testified before the U.S. Senate and Natural Resources Committee, in a forty-three page report, on the potentially devastating effects that proposed regulations would have on the oil and gas industry, in term of job loss, and reductions in drilling expenditures, at a time when the vital industry most needed support. Sound familiar?

At a White House briefing I attended in September, 2006, I asked US Secretary of Energy Samuel Bodman about the status of their pending national energy education initiatives. He did not have an answer, but promised he would have an aide contact me with answers. The aide did call, but provided me little information. Energy education was needed then, as it is now.

On December 4th, 2013, at the South Texas Wildcatters Association in San Antonio, I launched the energy education campaign "It's Time to Tell Our Story!" based upon my book "America Needs America's Energy: Creating Together the People's Energy Plan!" The message has been delivered through radio interviews in more than 30 states and 150 radio stations, a weekly radio show, weekly column/blog, speeches throughout the US, op-eds, newspaper interviews, and other media outlets.

The following are among those who I personally am involved with to provide energy education:

IEPC energy policy conference: In 1992, I founded and chaired the first conference which was held at the University of Oklahoma. Conferences have been held in Washington, DC, Tulsa, Denver, Houston and Oklahoma City. In 2017, the twenty fifth anniversary, events will be held throughout Oklahoma. Upcoming conferences/roundtables are planned to be held 2018- Detroit, 2019- Washington, DC and 2020-Houston.

The Energy Advocates: Energy Advocates was founded in 1974. The primary mission of The Energy Advocates is to inform the general public about our vital energy industry and energy policy.

Exploring Energy radio show and newspaper: I am the first Monday of each month guest on the award-winning radio show and have a monthly column in the newspaper. Through news and interviews, hosts Shawn Wilson and Nathan Brewer talk about all aspects of energy, from oil and gas to wind, solar, coal, nuclear, and geothermal, for one hour/five days a week. Big Chief Plant Services Exploring Energy Show is the main sponsor and Paul Joseph is the producer. Exploring Energy newspaper distributes 20,000 copies per month.

Oilman Magazine: I have a column in each issue of the magazine. The magazine is Houston based. In addition to the magazine, the website www.oilmagazine.com is a good source for energy education.

GTR Newspapers: I have a monthly column in the Greater Tulsa Reporter newspapers- Union Boundary, Midtown Monitor, Jenks District Gazette, Broken Arrow Express, Owasso Rambler, and the Bixby Breeze. Thanks to Forrest Cameron, GTR editor and publisher, for providing the opportunity to provide energy education.

University of Tulsa Master of Energy Business Industry Advisory Council: I serve as a member of the advisory council along with around twenty-five others from across the nation. The program is designed for working professionals who already have some experience in the energy industry. It has a broad-based energy business focus and is designed to train students on and managing organizations across the entire energy complex. The Master of Energy Business (MEB) is a 34-credit-hour graduate program offered in a technology-enriched online delivery format.

The oil and gas industry touches our lives daily. Among the petroleum-based consumer products that Americans use daily include: anti-septics, asphalt, bottles, clothes, computers, contacts, deodorant, drinking cups, eyeglasses, plastics, shampoo, shoes, shaving cream, telephones, toothbrushes, trash bags, tires, vitamin capsules, and thousands of other products.

Cell Phone Rescue Continues Expansion

Year-Old Company Plans to Double Size

By KIRBY DAVIS
Contributing Writer

As demand continues, Cell Phone Rescue intends to double its size while expanding its services.

Since its October 2015 launch under a different name, this repairer of cell phones, computers, tablets, and other electronic devices has opened three Tulsa area locations. Founder Ted Andress plans to add three to five more stores in this region, each three-person locations averaging 1,500 square feet.

"We are taking this industry to a completely different level," says Andress, who owns and operates the family-owned chain with his sons Teddy and Tyler. "We are taking it from a mom-and-pop-type business to more of a mainstream service-oriented business."

"It used to be anybody could open up just a small 500-square-foot repair store and be very limited," Ted Andress says. "We've hired the very best people and educated technicians with state-of-the-art equipment to be able to offer state-of-the-art services and a more wide variety of services."

This 10-employee Tulsa firm made its reputation repairing cell phones of all makes and models, with a one-year warranty on all completed work. Cell Phone Rescue also retails a wide variety of cases, cords, chargers and Bluetooth accessories. Andress says his company focuses on customer service while safeguarding customer data and privacy.

"It doesn't take long for us to repair these devices, using the best quality parts," says Tyler Andress. He says each location maintains an inventory of thousands of parts to help achieve a fast turnaround time.

Store locations are chosen to maximize easy access and population growth.

"There were no other repair stores in these areas," says Ted Andress.

Cell Phone Rescue finished its first year by branching into computer, game console, and drone repairs, along with sales of used and refurbished phones and tablets. The company also provides data recovery and virus removal services.

"We want to be at the forefront of that," says Ted Andress.

"We're the fastest-growing full-service cellular repair business in northeastern Oklahoma. We have customers that come to us from as far away as Miami and Coffeyville, Kansas, and all the way from Stillwater, Bristow, and McAlester."

Cell Phone Rescue adopted its new name at the close of 2016 to maximize growth opportunities in new markets, says Teddy Andress. Its new logo mixes lime green block letters and backgrounds with white and black reverses to build a unique brand image.

"We wanted to differentiate

FAMILY WELCOME: Cell Phone Rescue has shown amazing growth in its first year. Founder Ted Andress, left, and his sons Teddy Andress, center, and Tyler Andress look forward to a successful future as they stand in front of the 7462 S Olympia Ave. location in the Tulsa Hills Shopping Center. Cell Phone Rescue also has locations in Owasso at 12305 E. 96th St. N. and at 10035 S. Memorial Dr. in south Tulsa.

ourselves," says Ted Andress, noting how many retailers employ red and white signage. "When you drive by our stores, our signs kind of pop off the wall."

Cell Phone Rescue extended this color scheme into its store interiors, with walls alternating from solid white to lime green and back again. Large white letters proclaim the company's name on that lime green back wall.

Each 1,500-square-foot location provides not just retail space and a repair shop but a large waiting area with lounge chairs and TV displays.

"We wanted a nice professional presentation, a comfortable setting where you can sit down, drink a cup of coffee, read your paper, and be comfortable while we get your devices fixed," says Ted Andress.

The company unveiled cellphonerescue.com as it enters 2017. The Andress family intends to use this site, Facebook, and other social media options for its primary marketing efforts.

To celebrate its one-year anniversary,

Cell Phone Rescue will offer several specials in January at its three stores: 12305 E. 96th St. N. in Owasso, 7462 S. Olympia Ave., in the Tulsa Hills shopping center, and 10035 S. Memorial Dr. in south Tulsa. All three stores operate seven days a week.

"Drop in any one of our three locations to sign up for a free flat screen TV giveaway for Super Bowl Sunday," says Ted Andress. Each location will be giving away a TV. "We will also have 20 percent off on cases, and 15 percent off on all repairs through February."

PSO Benefits Wind Power

Public Service Company of Oklahoma (PSO) is lowering the cost for customers who sign up to receive wind power.

In a July 29 filing at the Oklahoma Corporation Commission (OCC), PSO proposed modifications to its existing Green Energy Tariff, known as WindChoice, to reduce the cost for customers who participate in the voluntary program. Today, the proposal was approved by the Oklahoma Corporation Commission, meaning the additional cost for customers who sign up for WindChoice will be reduced by as much as 76 percent beginning January 2017.

"WindChoice is an important option for customers - particularly those who are environmentally conscious or desire to support renewable energy in Oklahoma," says Scott Ritz, PSO director of Customer Services and Marketing. "Simplifying the tariff's structure will allow customers to receive the renewable benefit from PSO's wind resources at a much lower rate than before, which should make the program even more attractive to customers."

PSO began offering WindChoice in 2011 to allow customers to designate a specific amount of their energy requirement to come from wind. Under the newly-revised WindChoice tariff, not only will subscribers benefit from a much lower rate, they also will be able to choose the exact percentage of their electricity - from one to 100 percent - that comes from PSO's Oklahoma-based renewable wind energy resources.

Currently, approximately 1,000 customers are enrolled in the program, with residential customers accounting for 99 percent of the subscribers.

PSO, a unit of American Electric Power, is an electric utility company serving more than 545,000 customers in eastern and southwestern Oklahoma. Based in Tulsa, PSO has nearly 3,800 megawatts of generating capacity and is one of the largest distributors of wind energy in the state. More information about PSO can be found at PSOklahoma.com.

Exploring Streamline Architecture Around Tulsa

In previous columns, I've reviewed some of our well-known Art Deco buildings. But, there were other smaller, more modest buildings built in the late 1930s and 40s in the Art Deco style we call Streamline, which seldom receives mention.

Streamline leant itself easily to diners, service stations, movie theaters, residences and small commercial buildings. The design basis of these were on strong horizontal lines as opposed to the vertical emphasis of earlier Art Deco designs. Rounded corners in a parabolic curve and monolithic exterior skin almost devoid of ornamentation were classic characteristics. Materials commonly used included brick, stucco, glass block vitrolite, porcelain panels, chrome and aluminum. Four commercial buildings in this Streamline Art Deco design in Tulsa are Tulsa Monument Co., Phoenix Cleaners, City Veterinary Hospital and Security Federal.

Tulsa Monument Co., 1735 E. 11th St., was built in 1936 and designed by architect Harry Mahler. The design idea was that the building would simulate the appearance of a monument. The building is symmetrical with two wings off a central small clock tower element that houses the main entrance. The tower is stepped back and flanked by vertical pillars. The pillars match those at the corners of the wings, each is capped with three horizontal bands. The tower vertically is accented by columns of glass brick inset in a narrow perpendicular line. The skin is white plaster concrete trimmed in gun-metal gray.

The west half of Phoenix Cleaners at 125 E. 18th St. began life as a grocery store. It was purchased by the Robinson family and converted into a cleaning establishment in the late 1930s. Several fires in the late 1940s due to naptha and other cleaning solvents caused the owners to rebuild with noncombustible materials in 1947 and add the east wing. Today there is an antique shop in the west wing. The cleaners, located in the east wing, is owned by the third generation of the Robinson family, Todd and Allison Robinson. The exterior is painted brick with steel casement windows and a rounded southeast corner, with glass blocks, virtually the same as originally built. The second level floor frame is steel and concrete; there is no wood in the building structure. The main customer lobby has a diamond gridded terrazzo floor which appears to be in excellent condition.

City Veterinary Hospital, 3550 S. Peoria Ave., was designed by Joseph R. Koberling in 1942 and has operated continuously as a veterinary clinic. Today, it is owned by Dr. Chet Thomas. This one-story building has a skin of buff brick with strong horizontal banding achieved by periodic courses of corbelled brick. Corners are rounded and glass block is used in many areas.

Security Federal is a special Streamline building that unfortunately no longer exists except in the memories of longtime Tulsans. I include it because of its great Art Deco design and because my grandfather, C. C. Cole, was CEO there during the 1940s and early 1950s.

Security Federal began as a small financial institution, providing residential loans. Originally located in the Skelly Building, the landlord W. G. Skelly, repeatedly lowered the rent during the lean 1930s, enabling the newly formed Security Federal to remain afloat. In 1937, Security Federal bought the structure at 120 W. 4th St. and hired architect Harry Mahler to update the basic one-story brick building. Mahler faced the building with alternating dull and polished panels of black vitrolite in a stepped design terminating in a pediment featuring a clock.

Security Federal went on in the 1950s to become part of State Federal Savings and Loan and moved from the building. In its final years, the building became a bar called Court of the Three Sisters before surrendering to a wrecking ball in the 1980s. Pictures of this building may be found in the book, Tulsa Art Deco, originally published by The Junior League of Tulsa and reprinted by The Tulsa Foundation of Architecture.

CITY VETERINARY HOSPITAL: At 3550 S. Peoria Ave., it was designed by Joseph R. Koberling in 1942 and has operated continuously as a veterinary clinic.

TU Communication Hall of Fame to Honor Bill Hinkle

Information from this article is attributed to writer Hunter Howe Cates and the University of Tulsa

John William "Bill" Hinkle, a leading Tulsa-based advertising professional and adjunct professor at the University of Tulsa, will be inducted into the TU Communication Hall of Fame during a ceremony Jan. 26 at the Lorton Performance Center on the TU campus. The ceremony is scheduled to begin at 5 p.m.

This will be Hinkle's second honor from TU. In 2012 he received the J. Paschal Twyman Award, a special honor given only to individuals who display exceptional leadership and commitment to the university.

Hinkle is a big believer in teaching beyond the books. As an adjunct instructor at TU since 1994, he encourages students to step out of the classroom and into the real world long before graduation. Since he began teaching, eager students have been transformed into successful professionals in the advertising industry under his tutelage.

With more than 40 years of advertising experience, Hinkle is a Tulsa legend known for both his practical teaching applications and a passion for writing that dates back to his childhood.

"My dad owned the largest graphic design studio in the southwest for about 25 years," Hinkle says. "I was always around advertising people, and I knew from the eighth grade on that's what I was going to do."

Hinkle graduated from TU in 1969 and worked his way up the ladder in advertising. "I went to work as a gofer at an ad agency making $305 a month ... I was lucky to get that," he says.

Next, Hinkle accepted a copywriting position at Ackerman Ad Agency where he worked until starting his own advertising business in 1975. The name was changed to HinkleBrownBloyed in 1979. When he sold it in 1983, the firm had grown from a staff of two people to 35, but that agency was just the beginning. By 1991, Hinkle had set his sights on a new endeavor and created Hinkle Creative Services, Inc., a creative resource for companies and their marketing departments. His works have garnered him numerous advertising awards from across the country. Beyond his own personal success, Hinkle cares about the future of his TU students.

"This world is moving fast, and technology changes quickly, but nothing will replace the ability to communicate," he says. "Twenty-two-year-olds who graduate and go into this business must be able to sell themselves and understand the dynamics of the industry, or they'll never get anywhere."

While developing his agency, Hinkle offered to teach TU communications students practical application by allowing them to work with professionals on real accounts.

"We put students face-to-face with industry professionals on our advisory board; and when they graduate, they've already interned with people in the industry and have a leg up on the competition," he says.

In addition to real-world experience, TU students also benefit from the Hinkle Creative Center, an informal teaching space in Oliphant Hall sponsored by Hinkle, with smart boards, track lights and other mobile features.

"I didn't want anything that says this is a classroom with students lined up like pigeons," Hinkle says. "I wanted everybody to feel comfortable and to be creative."

Thanks to Hinkle's efforts, TU advertising graduates are in high demand in Tulsa and across the nation. Their portfolios reflect his dedication to student success.

As part of Hinkle's teaching responsibilities at TU, he oversees the Ad Program, which includes teaching several classes and managing and developing the TU National Student Advertising Team annually. He works with hundreds of advertising industry companies to place Ad Program graduates as employees. Hinkle is responsible for over 300 TU advertising, marketing, graphic design, broadcast production, and PR graduates being hired by various companies all over America.

BILL HINKLE

He says, "I am obsessed with doing breakthrough advertising creative for my clients based on sound strategy and research. I am also obsessed with helping as many TU students succeed in my profession during their school years and when they graduate."

In 1994, Hinkle began at TU as an unpaid adjunct.

But instead of drowning students in tests, he immediately had them producing campaigns for real-world clients. It wasn't easy. He says, for the first five years, "I literally had to beg people to give us a chance."

Those that did were surprised by the quality. However, Hinkle had a bigger goal in mind, to establish a full, interdisciplinary advertising curriculum. "You better be an advocate for these students," he says. "And the whole point of the Ad Program is to keep these superstars in town."

It took Hinkle about 13 years to establish the program. He found a home in the college of Arts and Sciences with the forward-thinking help of Dean Tom Benediktson and fellow professor Teresa Valero. Hinkle couldn't be happier now that he's blessed with students who are right-brainers like him.

As a teacher, Hinkle has arguably given as much to the industry as he did in his entire advertising career. Today, more than 80 of his former students are employed in the Tulsa industry with more than 150 others working across the country.

His former students include Lucinda Rojas-Ross who began her career with Tulsa firm Schnake Turnbo Frank PR. "He helped open doors when I was still a student that helped me land where I am today," Ross was eventually named Young Professional of the Year by PRSA of Tulsa, one of the association's highest honors. Ross says that Hinkle's "mentality of creating work you can be proud of for every client is something I continue to think about often in my career."

But his influence is felt not only by ad students. Despite being a speech pathology major, Sophia Olsen took all of Hinkle's classes and says his lessons will guide her in her own career. "He forces his students into situations where they must work together, be creative, and find new solutions. And he never fails to encourage everyone he meets to be remarkable."

Peace, Community at Heart of Be Love Yoga

By EMILY RAMSEY
Managing Editor

The practice of yoga has seen a sharp uptick in national popularity in the past four years. Tulsa is no exception to that.

Broken Arrow native Joe Picorale, owner of Be Love Yoga Studio, co-founded Tulsa's I Am yoga, music and art festival in 2011 when there were only three local yoga studios, he says.

Fast forward to present time, and the practice of yoga is alive and well in Tulsa, with the number of yoga studios continuing to multiply.

Yet, upon visiting various studios, students will find that studios' areas of emphasis within the practice of yoga can vary, sometimes dramatically.

"At many yoga studios, students come only for the fitness element," Picorale says, which is the strength portion of yoga that involves postures, or poses. However, the postures make up only one aspect of the practice. Postures are one of the "eight limbs of yoga," referred to as Asana.

"We focus on all of the 'eight limbs,' so our studio draws more students who are interested in following the lifestyle of a yogi," Picorale says.

Other "limbs" include Pranayama, proper breathing; Dharana, concentration; and Dhyana, meditation.

The original intent of yoga is to merge the mind, body, soul, spirit and emotions in order to attain self-realization, or pure awareness. Therefore, the practice of yoga involves attaining calmness and peace, something that Picorale found himself searching for five years ago.

Picorale had previously become heavily involved in political activism but found himself feeling increasingly anxious and dissatisfied with politics.

After cutting ties with those efforts, he attended a spiritual retreat in Oregon, where he met a fellow Tulsan who suggested that he try yoga and even took Picorale to his first yoga class when they both returned to Tulsa.

Picorale was quickly touched by the practice of yoga and its emphasis on peace and harmony of mind and body, he says. A year later, he organized the first I Am festival, which he co-founded, in an effort to connect and grow the local yoga community.

The festival is currently being run by its other co-founder, Melissa Joy, and takes place each summer.

After they created the festival, Picorale and Rhoades saw the need for their own yoga space, to allow them to more easily hold fundraising events for the festival and to further encourage the local yoga movement.

The I Am Yoga Studio, located at 1310 E. 6th St. in Tulsa's Pearl District, opened in November 2013. A few months later, Picorale changed the name to Be Love in order to avoid confusion and to keep separation with the festival.

Recognizing the growing national and local trend of yoga, Picorale, who is the sole owner of Be Love, took a number of steps after opening the Tulsa location.

B.A. STUDIO: Since opening in Tulsa, Be Love Yoga Studio has expanded into two additional greater Tulsa locations, opening in Broken Arrow in September 2015 and in Jenks in April 2016.

In January 2015, he established the Everyone Yoga School, a 200-hour yoga certification program, that has, to date, graduated 75 yoga teachers, making it the largest Tulsa-area provider of yoga teachers, he says.

In September 2015, Picorale opened Be Love studio on the western edge of Broken Arrow at 4904 W. Kenosha St., on the corner of 71st Street and Garnett Road. He, then, opened a third studio location in the greater Tulsa area in downtown Jenks, 211 E. Main St., in April 2016.

"We expanded quickly in order to get ahead of the curve; as a studio, we wanted to be well established as the demand grows," Picorale says.

In addition to focusing on the comprehensive practices of yoga, Be Love also makes effort to provide a feeling of community for its members.

Every Friday evening, the studio holds a donation class with proceeds benefiting a local cause. In the past, donations have benefited local business owners, schools and individuals in need.

"We want people to come here and feel good about themselves and receive a feeling of community," says Picorale.

"That's what makes it a community here: our students are trying to live better lives, and they recognize that in one another and, oftentimes, become friends outside of the studio."

Jeff and Molly Martin are not only married; they are also both impacting downtown Tulsa, particularly the Brady Arts District – Molly as an entrepreneur who moved Antoinette Baking Co. with her business partner into the Brady District in October 2015 and Jeff, founder of BookSmart Tulsa, who helped to create the Tulsa Literary Coalition, which will open Magic City Books, an independent bookstore, in spring 2017 in the Brady District.

Jeff's path to his local literary activism began during his time working at Barnes and Noble, organizing its author visits and signings.

In 2009, after he left the bookstore, with his connections to many nationally-known authors, he partnered with Mary Beth Babcock, owner of Dwelling Spaces, and started Book Pub, which would become BookSmart Tulsa.

The original concept was a monthly book club, discussing books in a bar setting, says Jeff. They rented out the second floor of McNellie's Public House for their first event, expecting 50-60 people but, instead, saw 350 attendees.

"It was encouraging that people were so excited about it," Jeff says, "but the difficulty with book clubs is maintaining the enthusiasm."

As the subsequent events saw lagging attendance, Jeff decided to discard that model and begin a visiting author series. In July 2009, BookSmart Tulsa held its first author event at Philbrook Museum of Art, featuring author Rivka Galchen, who grew up in Norman.

Since then, each month, the organization has featured a different author with rotating topics, such as cooking, science, fiction, and children's books, while also rotating venues in order to expose attendees to new places and sometimes correlate with a book's topic. The group has met in churches, food banks, restaurants, art galleries. BookSmart even held an author event in the empty Central Library in 2013 right after it closed to begin renovations.

Since the group's beginnings in 2009, BookSmart Tulsa has held more than 250 author events.

In 2012, Martin was inducted into the Tulsa City-County Library's Hall of Fame in recognition of the impact he has made on Tulsa's literary scene.

Molly's path to opening Antoinette Baking Co. with her business partner, Andrea Mohn, came about due to their mutual desire to work at a job they truly enjoyed.

They started small by offering catering services out of their homes, and the growth kept coming.

One of the catering requests they received was to make macarons, French merengue-based macarons, which had yet to infiltrate Tulsa.

The pastry proved to be more challenging than Molly expected: "I think we made about five different batches one night, trying to get it right."

That challenge spurred her desire "to get the recipe right," leading her on a yearlong journey to create the perfect macaron, even starting a blog to document her progress, with her eventual goal to bring the pastry to Tulsa.

She did just that when she and Mohn opened Antoinette Baking Co. in a small storefront in Brookside in 2012, where they remained for three years, "but we outgrew the space in six months," she says.

The final phase of the Oklahoma Aquarium's Sea Turtle Island, presented by The Oxley Foundation, is well underway, with the exhibit expected to open in March.

The 65,000-gallon tank will feature two 300-pound loggerhead sea turtles, reef sharks and tropical fish.

Alongside a boardwalk, spectators will be able to experience the ocean life from three viewing levels, including an underwater observation station for children.

"We want people to feel as if they've left Tulsa and landed in a sunny tropical island complete with tropical music," says Teri Bowers, COO and executive director of the Oklahoma Aquarium.

Loggerheads are one of seven species of sea turtles in the world. They can live approximately 50 years and weigh more than 300 pounds. Sea Turtle Island will highlight the endangered status of sea turtles and what can be done to protect the species, even from inland Oklahoma.

The project initially began in 2010 with early construction on the room where the exhibit will be located. However, due to the recession, the project was delayed until the aquarium was given a portion of the Vision 2025 surplus money in order to complete the exhibit.

The final phase of construction requires closing the exhibit from public view until opening. The aquarium will host a contest among area schools called See the Sea Turtles First Class, for a field trip during the unveiling of the exhibit. For adults, a new event will debut March 4, called Splash - Lagers and Loggerheads.
