A MAN IN AUSTIN HAS A WORLD CLASS IMAGINATION

Tumbleweed Smith

Tumbleweed Smith

An Austin man invented those lighted electronic billboards bright enough to see during daytime. He also used the same technology in inventing the lighted menu boards at drive-through restaurants. He used it to bring down the cost of color television sets.

Svi Yaniv (pronounced Za-VEE Ya-NEEV) was born and raised in Romania post World War Two, then lived in France, Israel (where he founded a college) and the US. When he was ten years old he read Jules Verne's book THE MYSTERIOUS ISLAND about prisoners of war who escaped in a hot air balloon and landed on a deserted island. One of the castaways was a scientist and used his knowledge to not only survive but also thrive. Zvi was inspired by the book and vowed he was going to learn science so well that he could use it to survive on a deserted island.

He holds more than 300 patents in the fields of electronics, medicine, food, the military, aviation and even dishware. Right now he's working on something called Aqua Calor where people can use the heat from their swimming pools to heat their homes in winter. His masters and doctorate degrees are in liquid crystals because he thought that was the future of television. He studied at Kent State. While a graduate student he made a speech to employees of a company in Michigan. The president of the company offered him a job. "He said he would pay me $80,000 a year," says Zvi. "This was in 1992 and that was a lot of money. I went to my advisor and told him about the offer and he told me that was more than he was making."

When Zvi kicked off his company, called Electronic Billboards, his backers thought it was a sexy item. The fact that you could sit in your living room and program a billboard miles away with instant commercials was revolutionary. So Svi and his associates set up an installation that would show commercials on see-through windows and you could still see inside the store where the equipment was set up. The store (sexy item, right?) was Victoria's Secret flagship store in the basement of the World Trade Center in New York City. The exhibit was to open at 5 PM on September 11, 2001. By then the building was down and the equipment was destroyed. He filed for bankruptcy. He wasn't down long. Soon he was back inventing things and CEOs of companies all over the world were clamoring for his services.

"I see a need and try to fill it," he says. "I have this American attitude that I can do anything I want to do." Zvi can't say enough about the value of a good education and leaning from your mentors. "Mentors are crucial. I was lucky to learn a lot from mine and apply what I learned to my life." Zvi's office and laboratory are in his home overlooking the Colorado River. He works from 10 AM to 8 PM daily.

He co-authored a book about his life with established writer Debra Winegarten of Austin. The title is MY LIFE ON THE MYSTERIOUS ISLAND OF NANO TECHNOLOGY.
