How To Prevent Back Pain?

It is an astounding statistic that more than 80% of the population will have at least 1 episode of back pain in their lifetime, and 50% of these people will develop ongoing or recurrent episodes of back pain. There is a lot of confusion in the media about back pain. Some people say, "I slipped a disc," and others say, "My back is out of alignment." Well, it has been proven in the scientific literature that neither of these widely held phenomena ever occur.

So, let's talk about "slipped discs" first. One thing for certain is this never occurs, and if it did, you would be paralyzed. The discs are shock absorbers, located between each vertebra. They have a tough outer shell called the annulus, and a liquid bag in the center called the nucleus pulposus. The shell holds the bag of fluid inside. But, at times, the bag can leak fluid, and this is called a herniated disc. These often times recover on their own, with proper movement. This is a naturally occurring event as well, and most people have at least one and don't even know it.

Now, let's talk about being out of alignment. The British Chiropractic Association recently rewrote their practice act, and actually removed this phrasing from their language! So, if the ones who have been pushing this nonsense for years were so convinced of its existence, then why would they cut it out?! Well...because it doesn't exist, and never has. There is a perfect anatomical alignment of your spine, and if this is disrupted, you would have serious leg and groin issues that would be far worse than sciatic type pain. We're talking loss of bowel and bladder control, as well as numbness, not to mention unsteady gait at times.

What we can agree on is things change as we get older. 90% of people over the age of 60 without pain have a bulging or herniated disc whether they are aware of it or not, so this is a natural occurring phenomenon as we age.

While these things do not cause the majority of back pain, movement problems do cause back pain. The good news is, you can fix the movement problems and decrease your back pain. The best way to do this is to seek out experts in the field of back pain and movement problems. I specialize in the area of back pain and I have happily helped many people over the years with back pain and movement problems. So...if you think this sounds like a good idea, then give me a call. Thanks for reading!

Robert Gieringer, PT, DPT, OCS, SCS, COMT, FAOMPT Bob specializes in the treatment of neck and back pain. He believes in an intensive hands-on approach to treating his patients, emphasizing both corrective manual techniques and exercises to facilitate the changes in patient response during each session.

Ask The Acupuncturist...

Veronica Cavella Pedersen, L.Ac.

Q.: My mother was recently diagnosed with macular degeneration and is slipping into depression because she was told by her eye doctor that this condition can lead to blindness. He said there is no cure and offered no treatment, just a "wait and see" approach. I hate seeing her like this and am hoping that Chinese Medicine may at least offer her some hope.

A.: Chinese Medical Ophthalmology is a specialty within Chinese Medicine which treats all types of eye conditions, including degenerative eye diseases, even when Western Medicine says there is nothing that can be done. This kind of diagnosis is very alarming and often depressing. All of our senses are very precious, but loss of sight is the one dreaded most. Conventional medicine tends to look at the eye and all of its parts and workings as somehow separate and independent, and eye disease as an isolated organ pathology. In contrast, Chinese Medicine takes a more holistic approach, acknowledging that the eye is part of an integrated system, the human body, mind and spirit, in which each part is affected by the health of the whole, and vice versa. Treatment will be directed to both the presenting eye condition and the underlying cause. Acupuncture will be an important part of treatment, but let me assure you that no needles are inserted into the eye itself! Some points near the eye are used, as well as body points in various locations, depending on the patient's condition. Instruction will be given for eye exercises and acupressure to be done at home, along with suggestions for supplements and Chinese Herbal Formulas known to benefit the eye. Diet and lifestyle will be discussed with the patient to see what improvements may be needed. Patients often report that they start to see better when they are exercising so this is part of the plan. Stress reduction is also very important to eye health and will be addressed along with any other psychological factors which may be impacting vision. The patient is very much involved in his/her own recovery which appeals to many instead of the "wait and see" approach.

In addition to macular degeneration, some of the other chronic eye conditions treated by Chinese Medicine include retinitis pigmentosa, glaucoma, cataracts, dry eye, photophobia, and poor night vision. A highly trained Acupuncturist can offer not only hope, but well documented results to people with eye problems. Just as every patient is different, results can vary but can include prevention of eye problems, preservation of current vision, and even recovery of some vision that was lost. Hopefully this information will encourage your mother to add Chinese Medical Ophthalmology to her current care. Veronica Cavella Pedersen, L.Ac. practices Acupuncture and Traditional Chinese Medicine for adults and children at 154 Deysher Road, Fleetwood, PA 19522 (Rockland Township), 610-987-0489, and at The Inner Peace and Wellness Center in Hamburg, PA. Hear her speak on Chinese Medical Ophthalmology at the Inner Peace and Wellness Holistic Expo at the Hamburg Field House on Sunday, November 5 at 2:00 pm.
