Perfection Not Required As A Parent

Back in the Povich-Springer- Lake days, I watched Oprah. During one taping with the self-help- guru-herself, there was a single mother and her kids (4 or 5 of them, all young adults). There was a great vacation give-away (surprise surprise) and all those kids got together to send in a video about their mom- who-never-complained-in-all-the-years-that-she-was-a-single-parent.

Wow, are you serious? I watched that and thought, "I can't top that!" I'd never be able to make it a year, possibly a month (okay a week) without a gripe about something. I mean I've spent a lot of energy on having a positive outlook on life and it's paid off, but I'm also human. Um, and do you know me? I'm a bit high strung sometimes and I have the worst luck. Worst. So sometimes it's just tough.

So, after that Oprah episode, I totally began to think I was the worst mother in the world. I wasn't anything like that mother. I wasn't perfect, and nor would I ever be able to compare! I mean, Sheesh, I was always working, always struggling, always tripping over something in my house (probably my own clutter) and I was always in some fictitious World War III that my ex would extravagantly try to create between us. That day I said to myself, "Wow, I couldn't win a 'You're the Best Mom' Award if I tried" ... and all I wanted to be, was the best mom in the whole world.

But, as the saying goes, and I'd come to realize, you don't always have to listen to everything you tell yourself (that may have come from a self-help book I read in the late nineties by Shad Helmstetter, great book you should read it).

Here we are coming up on Mother's Day. It's the day we traditionally celebrate that special person (mom or dad, aunt, uncle, grandparent or friend in some cases) who helped us become who we are. This past year I've become aware just how much I've always been loved and respected by my three children. Unbeknownst to me, I am that person.

Silly me. When I look around, I realize it's always been there, I just haven't given myself credit for it. My friends do, my family does. But have I? I should have seen it years ago, when my daughter wrote me at age eight a note about how her mommy was better than all the rest. Or when I was on my second divorce felling depressed and defeated, she would step into my bedroom at thirteen years old and secretly leave a candy bar and a hand-written note telling me how amazingly gorgeous, sophisticated, intelligent and awesome I was. The divorces crushed me to the very core. We'd been through so much and my ex slandered my very intentions and character. We were broke often, I worked a lot, we couldn't have or do what other families were doing, but even after all that and more...I couldn't see that they still loved me.

Today, many years later, we celebrate year three of being in our new home. We've had many incredible times and I can tell you now, that none of that stuff made a difference; not the things we missed, couldn't buy, even the hardships. It only made our family dynamics matter more. I see now that they loved me and still do. They saw tenacity, they saw hard work, they witnessed me not giving up EVER. All the same reasons why I love, respect and honor my father so much. They saw that in their own mother.

Through everything, I've stayed close to my kids. I have loved them the same way through it all, and I never stopped being the mom they'd always known...the rock, the loving friend, confidant and cheerleader. No matter who, or what, was in our lives (or wasn't) they know they could always count on me to be there. They clearly never gave up on me either, and for that, I am grateful and that is why I keep trying. Keep going. My dad was my inspiration when I was a kid; for the last 20 years it's been my children. Parents can't ever stop trying, because their kids love them and it will take a lot for them not to. It's when we quit, that they will.

I've never had much money or been able to provide lavish gifts or vacations, but I've given them what I have. Time; one on one talks, family dinners together at home, initiation of conversations about past things they've talked about or expressed interest in doing, volunteering at school, attending plays, sporting events and awards ceremonies (taxiing them to events and social engagements). Taking an interest in them and helping them through their own problems was what has mattered, not our daily circumstances.

Gaining a child's love is not a gift, potion, or magic trick of manipulation; it's called whole hearted investment (in them, in their future, their now, their everything). So those of you wanting to get your kids closer to you and feel their love, here it is... be genuine. Work hard. Don't lie to them, because they can tell. Help them get to their dreams (ask them what their dreams are). Listen to them (every time). Do NOT talk about their other parent negatively (that's THE first nail in the coffin even if your kids are little). My kids trust me. They don't hate my guts and haven't trashed my house when I'm not home (wink-wink, because I don't know everything, right? There was this one time when they washed the couch cushion while I was away and wouldn't tell me why lol). I've had the joy of never being told I'm hated in a fit of rage even though I have taken cell phone after cell phone away and grounded kids (ask my middle) for about a week at a time minimum. I spanked. I used sarcasm. Somehow, they still love me! For those of you worried someone can take your child's love away from you, they can't...not without your permission.

Sometimes we don't see our children's love for us when they're young. It's there, but we might not know it is. Sure, they make us art projects, ask us to attend shows, they want to sit in our lap and sweet talk us when they're little. But even with that, we might not feel appreciated or cared about because our kids are used to worrying about themselves, and that's okay. As they get older though, they begin to realize more and more what you've done for them and they appreciate it. They even learn how to show their appreciation back (however that might be). Regardless, they love you, because they have felt love.

I don't usually get gifts on Mother's Day, the kids just wait to go along with my plan of family gardening (last year we built my rose garden), sometimes it's a new activity, a hike or eating out...just as long as they're with me. That's the best gift to me. They don't need to get me anything, but they are getting to that age...and tell you the truth it's kind of cool. This Christmas I got one of the coolest things ever from my kids, well a few cool things, but this one floored me, not only because it was short for a bad word I have been known to use albeit less now less than in the past, but because it was also the first time I watched them all go in together and 'say it with a gift'. It was a 'Best EFFIN Mom' mug. Judge me- I mean a lot of people do- but I take this gift as a high honor. Some of my other favorite gifts were an NFL Saints t-shirt (way to go boy), a couple of journals and a Starbucks gift card.

They've never had that opportunity to gift me. The gifts they wrapped up for me came with many smiles, giggles, and "Remember when, mom?," but they don't realize that's the pay off, the smallest but most special signs of love. To them now, this is the fun part...paying attention to what I like and who I am. Picking out music I like to listen to or doing the dishes before I arrive home from work, prepping the fireplace kindling for me to arrive home and make a nice fire on a cold winter evening. I'm on Oprah every day getting the biggest award.

We all know a parent who isn't perfect, but who is amazing still. This Mother's Day send them a note, a card, text or call them. Maybe consider getting them a mug, so that everyday they can pick that mug up and go, "DAMN I NAILED IT...even though I thought I failed it".

SHEEP SHEARING WEEKEND

Lake Metroparks Farmpark • May 12 & 13 • 9 am to 5 pm

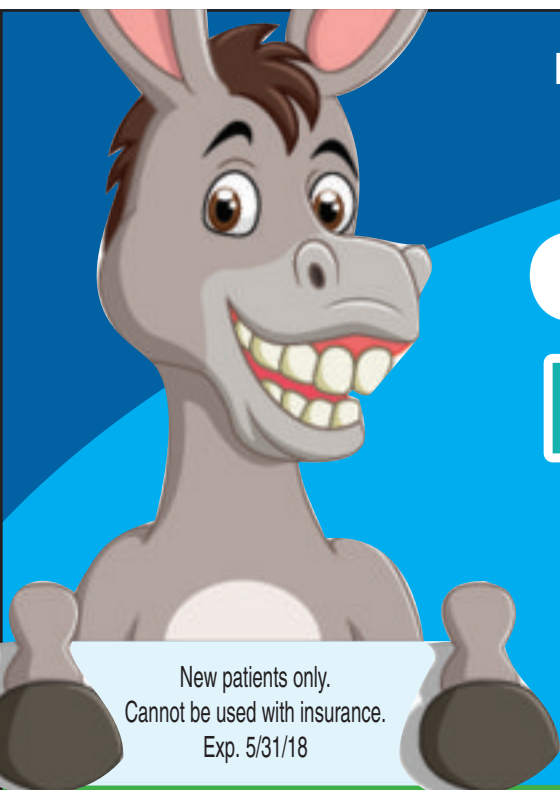

Shearing demonstrations presented throughout the weekend show sheep and goats being sheared (removing their winter coats of wool). Sheep and goats are shorn of their winter coats to obtain wool and prevent them from overheating during hot summer weather. This lustrous fiber is used to make many wonderful products from clothing to blankets. Sheep shearing is one of many hands-on opportunities children can experience.

Presented by Ganley Subaru East and Discount Drug Mart, Sheep Shearing Weekend, May 12 & 13 at Lake Metroparks Farmpark, is the place to learn how to spin and weave and make felt during ongoing hands-on demonstrations. Watch a border collie herd sheep and meet fiber-producing sheep. Meet fiber-producing animals including sheep, goats, alpacas and rabbits.

- Shearing demonstration times:
 - Rainbow sheep shearing (Sat. only) 9:30
 - Spinning & weaving (hands-on) 10:00 to 12:00 & 2:00 to 4:00
 - Sheep shearing (electric) 3:00
 - Sheep shearing (blade) 1:30
 - Goat shearing (electric) 2:30

- Border collie sheep herding: 11:30 am and 4:00 pm
- Mothers' Day: Complimentary tea & scone for mom, $5 for family members.
- Admission to Sheep Shearing Weekend is included with regular Farmpark admission. Farmpark members and children under 2 are free.
- Farmpark is located at 8800 Euclid Chardon Rd in Kirtland, Ohio (44094). For more information, visit lakemetroparks.com.

The "I CAN" Kid

by Carole Richards

Recently I met with a delightful smart and insightful ten-year-old fifth-grade girl. She spoke lovingly about spending time with her family. She was a happy child. Her mother brought her to see me because the parents thought she had dyslexia. The girl described school as difficult and reading was hard. However, when I tested her, she was able to read and comprehend 7th grade level as easily as she read a 5th grade passage. When I started asking her the questions on the 7th grade passage, she started to lose her confidence and missed three questions in a row. I told her she was reading at the 7th grade level and she answered five of the next six questions correctly. This girl told me she says "I can't a lot."

The parents seem to be positive. The girl is smart and capable yet she doesn't see it in herself. As parents, we need to reinforce with our children, the "I CAN" attitude even when things get difficult.

The "I CAN" attitude is even more important for children with disabilities. I hear parents making excuses for their children. One parent told me her daughter would throw herself down the stairs if she had to return to a social group. Another parent told me her son was traumatized because a tutor raised their voice. This particular tutor is one of the kindest gentlemen I've ever known. These children manipulated their parents. The parents gave in to their child's demands instead of pushing their child through the difficult situation and learning "I CAN".

Resilience is a learned skill. Some people have more innate "I CAN" in them but children can learn from failure, difficult situations and people. Perhaps your New Year's resolution can be to nurture your child's ability to learn from failure. Push them when they fail, stumble or are afraid. Teach your child that mistakes are good because we learn from them.

I have always enjoyed challenges. I'm not afraid to try new things ... I'm not afraid of failure. My childhood wasn't idyllic, but my parents nurtured my "I CAN" attitude. I started my first business at thirteen with my parents support. At sixteen, I was allowed to work at a resort away from home for the summer without my parents. At twenty, my parents permitted me to live in Hawaii for the summer alone. My son collected autographs and at thirteen he wanted to go to the Cleveland stadium by public transportation. I helped him learn how to do it. At eighteen, he drove to Nebraska from Cleveland alone to visit teens he had met in France the previous summer on a school trip.

Don't rescue your child at the first sign of failure or fear. Teach them to be an "I CAN" kid. This is perhaps the best gift you can ever give your child.

Carole Richards is president of North Coast Tutoring Services, author of Richards Learning Systems and a frequent guest on radio and TV. She can be reached at caroler@northcoasted.com.
