GOP ATTEMPTS VOTER ID BILL

The truth behind the new GOP voter ID proposal

BY CASH MICHAELS OF THE WILMINGTON JOURNAL

According to NC House Majority Whip Jon Hardister (R-District 29 - Guilford), "North Carolina is one of 18 states that doesn't have any form of identification requirements at the polls. In fact, all of our surrounding states require voter ID at the polls."

Rep. Hardister, the only North Carolina Republican to respond to a request for comment for this story, continued, "The purpose of voter ID is simply to protect the integrity of our elections process. Many people in North Carolina disagreed with the court ruling that struck down our voter ID laws. In other states that have passed voter ID, such as Georgia, voter participation among minorities has increased steadily. Remember that our law allowed several types of ID to suffice, and if a person did not have a valid form of ID, they could obtain one for free. In the event that someone went to the polls and forgot their ID, they could still vote by completing and signing a provision ballot."

Hardister, the new voter ID bill's co-sponsor, concluded, "In this case, we are offering a constitutional amendment to the voters so the people can decide directly whether or not they want voter ID requirements at the polls. I am confident that this referendum will pass by a strong margin on the ballot in North Carolina."

It should be no surprise that there are many who successfully fought the unconstitutional

Black Democratic lawmakers in the State House are on one page when it comes to warning all about the newest attempt by Republican legislative leaders to put voter photo ID back on North Carolina law books, except this time, they want the public to approve it by referendum so that they can come back later and write the new law as they see fit.

"This is the same discriminatory law that was previously struck down by the courts," and West Virginia.

The Court's decision came in Husted v. A. Phillip Randolph Institute, which reversed a decision by the Sixth Court of Appeals. The court ruled that the law violated the Failure-to-Vote Clause—the clause that generally prohibits States from removing people from the rolls "by reason of [a] person's failure to vote." The case was filed by a voter who lived at the same address 16 years and was removed from Ohio's voter rolls.

Republican Ohio Secretary of State Jon Husted argued the purge of infrequent voters helps to clean up voter rolls. Ohio's policy, with the blessing of the U.S. Supreme Court, now can be used as a model by other states, Husted said.

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights said the ruling could disenfranchise millions of voters across the country.

Supreme Court Justice Samuel Alito, writing for the Court's conservative majority, said the Court was not deciding whether Ohio's policy "is the ideal method for keeping its voting rolls up to date. The only question before us is whether it violates federal law. It does not." Associate Justice Clarence

The decision is expected to have a devastating effect on the state's black voters and it could get even worse when the ruling is adopted by other states with midterm elections on the horizon.

Thomas filed a concurring opinion.

Justice Stephen Breyer filed a dissenting opinion, in which Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Sonia Sotomayor, and Elena Kagan joined. Justice Sotomayor filed a dissenting opinion, according to SCOTUSblog Coverage.

Justice Sonia Sotomayor said the ruling ignores the history of voter suppression which was why the NVRA was enacted.

"Congress enacted the NVRA against the backdrop of substantial efforts by states to disenfranchise low-income and minority voters, including programs that purged eligible voters from registration lists because they failed to vote in prior elections," Sotomayor said.

The voter purges have had a devastating effect on Ohio's black voters. In 2015 alone more than 40,000 voters were purged from Cuyahoga County, Ohio, which has a significant racial minority population, creating an additional barrier for people of color to exercise their right to vote. Cleveland is the largest city in Cuyahoga County.

After this ruling voting rights advocates said they will develop a new strategy to block Ohio's voter purges.

al 2013 NC voter ID law, who have vowed to fight the newest legislative iteration introduced last week by Republican House Speaker Tim Moore.

This time, apparently in an effort to get around any forthcoming legal challenges, House Bill 1092-

"Constitutional Amendment [to] Require Photo ID to Vote" would amend the North Carolina Constitution to require voter photo ID. Voters in this November's 2018 midterm elections would be asked on their ballots - "[] FOR [] AGAINST-constitutional amendment to require voters to provide photo identification before voting."

But this is the part that few are paying attention to.

If voters this November 6 vote "FOR" the constitutional amendment, the referendum is certified by the State Board of Elections within a few days and then sent to the State Secretary of State's Office for permanent record. According to HB 1092, the amendment "...is effective upon certification...and effective when it becomes law.

All that needs to happen then is the GOP-led legislature to come back after November, actually then write a new voter ID law and pass it.

"This latest proposal by Republicans in the North Carolina General Assembly isn't about protecting our elections," says Congressman G.K. Butterfield (D-NC-1). "It is about suppressing the vote," noting the fact filled conclusion by the federal court which knocked the 2013 voter ID law, recruitment, selection and training of board members.

Adeleke first encountered the conduct system as a UNCW student, where he was active in campus life. His experience wasn't a direct result of something he did, but he said it drove home the point that choices have consequences. It also steered him toward a career in student saying that it specifically targeted suppressing the African-American vote "...with surgical precision."

Dr. T. Anthony Spearman, President, NCNAACP, told mega companies Amazon and Apple not to move operations to North Carolina because of "Legislating state sponsored discrimination cannot continue without consequence."

What most expert observers find interesting is that, if Republicans were concerned about "...the integrity of our elections process," as Rep. Hardister says, then they would address the mail-in ballot process, that most White Republicans, not Black Democrats or poor people use during elections.

What is also ironic is that, while 34 other states, including those surrounding North Carolina, require voter ID, a 2016 study by both The Washington Post and News 21 of voting in Arizona, Ohio, Georgia, Texas and Kansas since 2012, "...confirmed the academic consensus that impersonator voter fraud is simply not a problem," reported Slate.com. "In none of these states over the past four years has a single person been caught impersonating another voter in order to cast an illegitimate ballot."

traditional Nigerian names," he said. "While I was at UNCW, I was known by one of my Nigerian nicknames, Deji."

At UNCW, he served as a member of the Dean's Advisory Council and an orientation leader. Adeleke worked in the Technology Assistance Center and as a desk receptionist in Galloway

Slate.com went on to state in its Sept. 2016 article, "The vast majority of voter fraud prosecutions touted by conservative groups like the Heritage Foundation involve absentee ballots that were illegally cast, and the only voting fraud schemes with the potential to actually swing elections involved mail-in ballots, not impersonation at the polls."

The article continued, "They are purportedly designed to thwart voter impersonation, which, again, is virtually nonexistent. None of North Carolina's restrictions-or any of the restrictions recently pushed through Republican dominated legislatures-would stop mail-in ballot fraud."

If Republicans were truly serious about eradicating voter fraud, they would severely restrict absentee voting, permitting it only when voters have a good excuse, like illness. Why don't they do so? Because absentee ballots are widely considered to favor Republicans, just as early, in-person voting is typically viewed as favoring Democrats. The Slate.com story concluded, "Republicans don't want to restrict a voting method that boosts their chances of winning, even though that method leaves more room for fraud."

Advice to graduates: Pursue a PhD in common sense

(Via TriceEdneyWire.com)

"Education must not simply teach work. It must teach life." - W.E.B. DuBois

This time of year brings great pride and congratulations for graduates at all levels, from high school to doctorates. But the most important degree I can recommend is a PhD in common sense, with a concentration in thriving and surviving in 21st-Century America.

Common sense is genius wrapped in work clothes. And to achieve it, we must learn four lessons.

First lesson: Don't ever forget from whence you came. Along the long journey of life, one need only recognize that as graduates of 2018, you're standing on the shoulders of those who came before. As you celebrate your success after many years of hard work, financial sacrifice, long nights - in many cases working and going to school at the same time - there are many out there from your hometowns and neighborhoods, maybe in your own family, who will not have the opportunities you have today. This nation has too many children who are born into and grow up in poverty. This nation has a problem of mass incarceration. This nation still has too much gun violence. To whom much is given, much is expected, demanded and required. Go back to your high school, to your community, to the young people, and let them see your success. Let them hear your story. Let them understand what you had to do to get to today.

Lesson two: Pursue excellence in every instance. It is still an unfortunate fact that to be Black, you've got to be better. Your grandmother and mother will tell you that time and again. But you can be the best. Say no to mediocrity. Say no to half-stepping. Say no to foot-dragging. Be excellent. And remember, excellence is not perfection. No one is perfect. What excellence means is the pursuit of perfection and the faith that in all of our endeavors, you have given everything that God has given you to accomplish to achieve and to pursue your goals and your dreams.

Lesson three: In this nation today, racism is real. But you are not going to let racism break your spirit. Whether it's Starbucks or Waffle House. Whether it's Trayvon Martin or Michael Brown or Eric Garner. Whether it's a student taking a nap from studying too hard in a student lounge at Yale university. Implicit and explicit bias is still a part of American life. It's in the criminal justice system, where people of color who serve longer sentence than white men who commit same crimes. It's in the scourge of hate crimes that have spiked over the last two years. It's in the leaders talking about building walls when we should be talking about building bridges.

Racism is real. But you're not going to let it break your spirit. Frederick Douglass didn't let racism break his spirit, and he didn't let Lincoln's hand shake when he signed the Emancipation Proclamation. Racism didn't break the spirit of Harriet Tubman, who carried members of her family through the back woods on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, time and time again, to freedom. Racism didn't break the spirit of Thurgood Marshall in 1954 when he persuaded the Supreme Court to declare unanimously that that school segregation is unconstitutional. Racism didn't break the spirit of Booker T. Washington or W.E.B. DuBois. Remember that Rosa sat so Martin could march, so Barack could run, and Barack won so you can soar.

Finally, America respects economic power and political power. Now that you have a college degree, it's time for you to build your assets. Building assets means investing in things that appreciate in value. Yes, you need a car but even the fanciest car doesn't appreciate in value. Fancy handbags and fancy shoes don't appreciate in value. Glam and glitter do not appreciate in value. Real estate does. Stock portfolios do. I know many of you are saddled with student loan debt. But don't ever think any dime you invested in yourself was a dime wasted. If it is within your vision for yourself and the skill set that God has given you, build a business. Hire more people. Grow that business and sell that business and build a new business. Economic power is what we need.

This nation understands political power. We shirk our duty and our responsibility when an election comes and we don't vote. We surrender our power to others when an election comes and we don't vote. We need to send a message to the people who lead this country that we do not want a divided America. We do not want an America of walls; we want an America of bridges. We do not want an America of hate; we want an America of cooperation and an America of love. We want an America where everyone, regardless of race, creed, color, religion, orientation, or national origin is respected and honored as one of God's children. That's the America we want.

Of all the honors I've been humbled to receive in my life, and all the things I've learned from attending great institutions, the most important degree I got is the PhD in common sense I got from my mama. It came from these four lessons: Remember from whence you came. Pursue excellence. Racism is real but will not defeat us. And America respects economic power and political power and while we do not worship it, and we will build it each and every day of our lives.

Congratulations to the class of 2018!

"Marc Morial is President/CEO of the National Urban League."

MATTERS OF OPINION

Hey, elected officials:

No more chicken dinners! We need policy

It's that time again. It occurs every year around the same time like clockwork. It's election season.

Political signs infiltrate Black neighborhoods, placed by campaign operatives hoping you remember their respective political candidate come election time. More importantly, these political operatives are hoping your familiarity with their respective candidate will drive you to the polls with the belief that their efforts will translate into a vote for them at the ballot box.

Establishing familiarity is quite an effective tool, especially when it comes to creating a sense of connection with people. Now be honest. If connecting with people through establishing a sense of familiarity weren't so effective, why would radio stations play the same song over and over again, or why would major companies spend an inordinate amount of money to consistently and strategically advertise their product or service to consumers on a regular basis?

Seeking to connect with people by establishing a sense of familiarity is one of the first things any campaign team tries to do to help get their respective candidate elected.

Have you ever noticed that during every election season, radio ads become more frequent, print mailers get sent out in bulk quantities and television ads get placed on any given network during key television shows in an effort to try and reach registered voters?

Politicians have long been staples in our community.

Many of them visit a church here, walk the block and knock on doors over there; kiss babies, shake hands and even give the Black community stuff to get them to come out to the polls and vote. It is fascinating the way some political candidates scurry around during election season trying to solicit the Black vote so that they can get elected to a certain office or retain their current seat. It's an art. Many of these campaign operatives and elected officials have it down to a science.

However, when it comes to developing key, solid policies that will help the Black community, many of these same candidates disappear never to be heard from again until the next election cycle rolls around. Interestingly, many of these elected officials get a pass for doing nothing.

Now, if members of the Black community would be completely honest, they would admit that a lot of these elected officials are often treated like high-profile celebrities, rather than public servants who have the power to advocate for substantive policies that can literally change the economic landscape and quality of life of their communities.

One act of familiarity that has been a go-to approach to reach the Black community has been the tactic of political candidates using certain gimmicks to solicit votes.

You know what I'm talking about; offering the Black community chicken dinners, BBQ cookouts, fish plates, steak days, gift cards, air conditioners for senior citizens, etc.

Many of these politically-motivated gimmicks have and continue to be used to get Black people to vote for a particular candidate.

You know the routine. Black voters get out to vote, then there is very little reciprocity from many of the candidates towards the Black community, if they are elected.

Think about it for a moment and ask yourself some questions.

What evidence do you have to prove that any of your elected officials have actually advocated for you? Ask yourself, when it comes to developing sound policies and legislation for the Black community, when was the last time your elected officials drafted any policy or advocated for any legislation at the local, state and/or federal level that has positively impacted you?

Now, you may have been invited to a fish fry, steak dinner or community social event, but ask yourself when was the first or last time any of your elected officials educated, equipped and informed your community about any key issues that is impacting them or will affect them?

Truth be told, the Black community has been short-changed when it comes to advocacy by many of their elected officials, regardless of the elected official's race or ethnicity. Blacks have also been deprived of having progressive and substantive policies drafted by many of their elected officials.

In many cases, instead of talking to elected officials about substantive policies and key legislation, elected officials are often sought after to attend an event or take a picture with someone as if they are a Hollywood star, versus a public servant who was elected to serve the people. Again, it's about familiarity.

The Black community deserves to be treated more like a partner in a serious relationship versus some fling on the side where politicians whisper sweet nothings in our ears in order to get the only thing they really truly want: the Black vote.

The Black community must stop allowing disengaged elected officials to continue making empty promises in order to get their vote, and then turn around, close the deal (get their vote), and never hear anything from these individuals anymore until they need their Black vote again. The same thing goes for political candidates who don't win when they run for office as well.

Elected officials are not highly-paid Hollywood entertainers. Elected officials are public servants. The Black community must stop treating elected officials as if they are the hottest celebrity and start demanding sound policy offerings from them. The Black community must embrace accountability and adopt a realistic expectation of having their elected officials be the advocates they need to get things done and fight for them by any means necessary.

This year, the National Newspaper Publishers Association (NNPA), a trade group representing over 200 Black-owned media companies across the U.S., is focused on encouraging 5 million Blacks to register to vote before the midterm elections. We need to elect politicians who care about creating sound legislation and being advocates for the Black community year-round.

The same energy and efforts that these elected officials use to get elected, or re-elected, should be the same energy they use when it comes to sitting down with the Black community to better understand our needs and advocate for policies that positively impact their community.

If the constituents of these elected officials have not progressed since they have been in office, and are no more advanced as a result of their leadership, it is time to start looking for new leadership.

Elected officials can keep giving out chicken dinners, BBQ cookouts, fish plates, steak days, gift cards, air conditioners for senior citizens, etc., but what the Black community really needs, however, are sound policies, legislation and advocacy from their elected officials.

The employment situation is improving, so why aren't workers dancing

(Via TriceEdneyWire.com)

The most recent unemployment rate report seems to contain nothing but good news. The overall unemployment rate is down to 3.8 percent, the lowest that it has been since 2000. The Black unemployment rate, at 5.9 percent, is lower than it has ever been. With the white unemployment rate at 3.5 percent, the ratio between Black and white unemployment, usually stuck at around 2, is below 1.7 percent, a historic low. While it is risky to make conclusions about Black unemployment, given month-to-month fluctuations (the last time 45 crowded about low Black unemployment rates in January, the number shot back up the following month by nearly a full percentage point), it is clear that the employment situation for African Americans has improved in the 500 or so days since 45 took office.

To be sure, much of the improvement in the labor market can be attributed to the Obama recovery. President Obama put everything in place to ensure that the labor market improved. Still, it would be churlish to deny that some 45-inspired policies may have improved the employment situation. With economic growth nearing 3 percent, and with business confidence stable, more than 220,000 new jobs were created in May. Tax cuts have encouraged businesses to add employees; the fact that wages have increased by more than 2 percent suggests some slight tightening in the labor market. Good news, right? So why aren't workers dancing?

Black teens have hardly any reason to dance. Although the unemployment rate among Black teenagers dropped nearly ten percentage points, from 29 percent to 19.6 percent, a big part of this drop is contained in the fact that fewer teens are either working or looking for work. A year ago, there were 788,000 Black teens in the labor market, but the number had dropped to 681,000 last month. Thus, fewer teens were working last month (547,000) than a year ago (579,000). Even though many teens have dropped out of the labor market because they don't think they can find work, it is likely that more will look for work this summer. It is extremely unlikely that the lower unemployment rate for teens will sustain through the summer unless businesses are strongly motivated to hire part-time and temporary workers this summer.

Teens have no reason to dance, but what about the rest of us? The unemployment rate for Black women is at an amazing low of 4.7 percent, more than two full percentage points lower than a year ago. The labor force participation of Black women is down slightly - there are about as many Black women in the labor force now as a year ago, despite population growth. Additionally, 45's threats to cut the federal workforce, not yet substantially realized, will have a disproportionate effect on Black women, since about 20 percent of all Black women work for the federal government. If you combine this with the threats to the social safety net, not yet realized, but anticipated, one can understand why few are dancing, even though the growth music is playing.

After having passed massive tax cuts that will only increase the deficit, House Republicans are talking about budgetary "clawbacks". Just this week, they have discussed cutting the food stamps by requiring more work of those who receive SNAP funding (a sizeable portion of SNAP recipients work but earn so little that they qualify for food assistance) and frozen some unspent funds from the child health program. House Speaker Paul Ryan, in his few remaining months in leadership, has pledged "entitlement reform" including Medicaid and Social Security cuts. Even with lower unemployment and modest wage growth, these "entitlement reforms" bode ill for many workers.

Many would suggest that we simply celebrate the good news - lower unemployment rates and more new jobs are certainly worth noting. But some of the gains are shaky, not solid. Some are a function of people dropping out of the labor market. And some people's economic condition will not improve, especially with anticipated policy changes. While aggregate numbers look great, some people aren't dancing because they haven't been invited to the party.

OFFSHORE ENERGY

Plays Vital Role in U.S. Security

No one understands the connection between energy security and national security better than the military, and veterans like me strongly support expanding oil and natural gas production, both onshore and offshore. It is a rather easy choice when the options are (1) safely produce oil and natural gas here at home, or (2) defer to hostile and despotic regimes outside the U.S.

There's no question that U.S. oil and natural gas production plays a vital role in enhancing the national security interests of our nation and our allies around the world. The rise of the U.S. as the world's leading producer of oil and natural gas has effectively curtailed the power of countries like Russia and Iran, who heavily rely upon energy as a geopolitical tool. And offshore energy resources are a big part of our success. Providing more than 1 million barrels of oil per day for the past 20 years, offshore energy is the backbone of a domestic energy revolution that has shaken up global energy markets and helped to drive down prices for homes and businesses.

While we've been producing oil and natural gas in the western and central Gulf of Mexico for decades, 94 percent of federally controlled offshore acreage remains off limits to production. It is vital to our military and national interests that we expand opportunities for exploration and production.

That's just what a proposal from the Interior Department would do. The department's draft proposed leasing program for 2019-2024 opens the door to responsible energy exploration in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic, Pacific and Arctic. Government estimates indicate 90 billion barrels of oil and 327 trillion cubic feet of natural gas could be awaiting discovery on the U.S. outer continental shelf (OCS). Opening additional areas to development could generate hundreds of thousands of jobs and lead to production gains of more than a million barrels of oil equivalent per day – further reducing dependence on overseas energy.

State officials from Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas – where offshore energy exploration actually is allowed – are onboard. These policymakers and their constituents have experienced firsthand the economic growth that energy development brings to communities, and they know that energy operations safely coexist with other industries – and with military activity. As more than 20 members of Congress wrote to the Interior Department, "(The) experience in the Gulf of Mexico over decades clearly demonstrates the compatibility between oil and gas activities and other ocean uses, including military training, tourism, and commercial and recreational fishing – all of which thrive cooperatively in the Gulf."

By Lieutenant Colonel Dennis O. Freytes
USA (Ret.) Florida Chairman,
Vets4Energy

The key word when it comes to military compatibility is "cooperatively." Under longstanding practice, military leaders control the location and conditions of energy development near its bases, and a long history of coordination with the Department of the Interior ensures that energy activities follow any necessary stipulations. In the central Gulf of Mexico, in close proximity to Texas and Louisiana ports and military bases, 36 percent of leases are located in military use areas, and military activities have been carried out successfully and without conflict.

In a recent letter, Deputy Secretary of Defense Patrick M Shanahan recognized that an expanded offshore energy strategy "is intent on increasing domestic energy production to fortify national security objectives and reduce our dependency on imported energy" adding that the Defense Department "supports the development of national domestic energy resources in concert with enabling military operations, training and testing."

Not only is offshore development compatible with other critical industries and military activity, it is safer than ever. Through joint efforts from industry experts and government regulators, more than 100 industry safety and environmental standards have been created or strengthened since 2010, and the industry launched the Center for Offshore Safety to ensure continual safety improvements.

Our nation has come a long way in advancing our national security interests through the development of U.S. oil and natural gas resources, especially our offshore energy resources. Given the long lead time necessary in offshore development, decisions we make today will determine our energy security 15 years into the future, and beyond. It makes sense to keep as many options on the table as possible. Let's focus on the facts and move forward with policies that enable our energy and military sectors to thrive as the greatest in the world.

The natural gas and oil industry provides a bright future for all Americans. The innovative technologies pioneered by America's natural gas and oil industry are meeting our country's energy needs and producing cleaner energy and reducing industry's environmental footprint. Our air is cleaner than it's been in decades and emissions are at 25-year lows, thanks to increased use of natural gas. That's how we are powering past impossible and soaring toward a cleaner, better tomorrow.

HOMETOWN NEWS FROM BRUNSWICK COUNTY

Celebrating the life of Deacon George Washington Bellamy

This week, we celebrate the life and the homegoing of Deacon George Washington. To celebrate is to set aside a time to observe to honor or pay respects to a certain event or person. The celebration service in honor of the life of Deacon Bellamy was held at Saint John Missionary Baptist Church, 2586 Old Ocean Highway, Bolivia, North Carolina on Saturday, June 2, 2018 at 2:00 p.m. The service was very well attended, with crowds of friends and loved ones in attendance from far and near. It was a homegoing celebration that will be long remembered by the young and old.

It was a homegoing celebration that will be long remembered by the young and old. Rev. Dr. Terry Henry officiated and Pastor Quan Stewart delivered the eulogy.

For Deacon Bellamy, life's sun rose on March 13, 1946 and set when he was accidentally killed in a very tragic automobile accident on May 28, 2018. This was God's chosen time and place for him to leave his earthly home, family, and earthly friends and go to his heavenly home to be with the Lord. God, along with His heavenly angels awaited him there.

We go back to his days of living and growing up on a farm in Brunswick County. He knew what it was to work hard and struggle to make a living for the family. He graduated in 1964 from Brunswick County High School with honors. Upon leaving home, he enlisted in the United States Army in 1966. He served our country valiantly during the Vietnam War. After three years of active service, he received an honorable discharge. Following his discharge from military service, he enrolled and matriculated at Southeastern Community College, from where he graduated with honors and a diploma in welding. He also received a diploma in diesel mechanics. He worked various jobs in order to support his family and retired after thirty-five years of service with Brunswick County.

He married the love of his life on July 5, 1975. He was a wonderful husband.

He was an active member of the Piney Grove Improvement Association. He was truly a man of many trades, one who used his skills to show support and love in the community. It was nothing for him to drop off vegetables at the neighbors' houses or work on the neighbors' air conditioners. He also served the church with diligence, ushering, working in the kitchen, taking out the trash, etc. Many times, he performed many of these tasks on the same day. No job was too large or too small, and no person was treated with less than the utmost respect.

He leaves to mourn his loss and cherish his memory:

Additional honors were brought by the military services rendered, and his corpse was borne to the Reaves' family cemetery by a carriage drawn by white horses in Bolivia.

The Bellamy Family acknowledges with sincere appreciation the many gestures of friendship and expressions of love shown toward us during the passing of our loved one. Your love, concern, and many acts of kindness will be remembered always. Your Christian compassion will help us accept the sovereign will of God!

Verniece E. Stanley is a native of Brunswick County. She grew up on a farm but wanted more excitement in life. She graduated from high school in Brunswick County in 1948 and graduated from Fayetteville State Teachers' College in 1952. She taught school in Brunswick County for nine years. She moved to Baltimore, Maryland, married, and taught school for twenty-five more years. She received her master's degree from Morgan State College in Baltimore City. She retired and moved back to Bolivia, N. C. where she enjoys writing articles for The Wilmington Journal and is an active member of the NAACP Board.

Our beloved, Pastor Gwendolyn Dunbar was born on April 7, 1941 and transitioned on May 30, 2018. Gwen was the first born child of the late Ishmael and Fronnie Mitchell. She was born and raised in Bolton, North Carolina. In 1965 she left North Carolina and went to Virginia to live with Kitty and Roland Bagby where she graduated from Crestwood High School in Chesapeake, Virginia.

After graduating Gwen moved to New Jersey, married and had three children; Lisa, Bernard and Corey (deceased). She also raised another daughter Cynthia. Gwen was a stay at home mom so she could raise her children. Years later she decided to enter the workforce and was employed by Bell Atlantic until her retirement.

In 1988 Gwen married Roy Anthony Dunbar. They resided in Maplewood, New Jersey. She was a woman who loved God and served as an usher at many churches including, First Born Church of the Living God, Pentecostal Temple of Faith and Holy Ghost Prayer Tower. She received certificates in; Public Speaking and Counseling for Battered Women and a Bachelor's Degree in Christian Studies from the School of the Apostles. She was also a member of Restoration Center and served on the apostolic team.

God called her to pastoral leadership in 2002 where she began her walk under the leadership of Pastor Theresa Piert and the late Apostle Ernest Leonard. The time came when she was ready to branch out on her own. She and her husband, Roy Dunbar created "In His Presence Ministries", where she went into the neighborhood and extended her ministry outside the walls of the church by taking in the homeless, feeding, clothing and helping them find shelter. She also began mentoring battered women. The people she helped truly loved her. Gwen was a mother to many sons and daughters.

In 2009 Gwen and Roy moved back to her hometown of Bolton, North Carolina to be with her mother. There she became a member of Community Prayer House under the leadership of Apostle Freeman. She also started working part time as a counselor at a home for battered women in Whiteville, North Carolina. She was unable to continue her service due to her illness.

Gwen became good friends with Pastor Terry Lee and later became a member of "Closer Walk Methodist Church".

Gwen led an exemplified life as a servant of Jesus Christ. She ministered, taught and mentored any and everyone. She touched so many lives, even during her illness. Many people have said, "We will not meet another woman like her", "I don't care where you look or how long you look, you will never find another Gwendolyn Dunbar". She will forever be missed.
